It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF
GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND
DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

ON the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the Reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished ; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

THAT our ancient monasteries, whose history in all the minutiae of detail, which though unknown to, or scarcely heeded by the writers of the past generation, is now fully placed at our disposal through the well-directed efforts of modern research, did in their day exercise a vast and powerful influence over the people of this land, both in a religious, as well as in a political and social point of view, is a proposition to which few persons will refuse their assent. However much these institutions may be unsuited to the spirit of the age (to use a familiar but frequently misapplied expression) there can be no doubt that in their day they were of inestimable advantage to the localities where chance had placed them. We are accustomed at the present time to boast of our numerous charitable institutions, and perhaps to over-rate their importance in comparison with the efforts of a former age ; we have our hospitals, our infirmaries, our orphanages, our homes, our asylums, our parochial schools, our visiting societies ; and the benefits which flow from the judicious administration of these charities are undoubtedly of great magnitude ; but we must not forget that many of the functions which are now discharged by these institutions were the proper and special province of the monastery, and were in most cases faithfully and honestly fulfilled. It is thus that the monastery held an important place in the social economy of our ancestors ; it was not only a seminary of religion which provided for the spiritual wants of the people, but it also looked to their material and physical requirements, which otherwise might have gone neglected or wholly unprovided for.

The monastery was, as it were, both in its educational and missionary aspect, what the university and the cathedral aim at; it kept up from among its inmates a constant and regular supply of candidates for holy orders,¹ many of whom would go forth into the world, and carry into their future sphere of action much of the good governance and rule learnt in their mother monastery; while in the ranks of its permanent adherents there would not be wanting zealous and fervent priests to minister to the home population, and preach to them of the paths which lead unto peace. It was this missionary aspect which formed so bright a feature in the monastic system, and which even now in these days the Church of England is beginning to understand and to appreciate.

The modern school of thought teaches us to look upon monasteries as institutions which, though once beneficial or even necessary, are now, having done their work, effete and useless. They were according to some writers the authors of their own decay, and bore within themselves the seeds of dissolution, but that this is a grave truth I think has yet to be proved. In England they did undoubtedly fall, and the sixteenth century saw their destruction and demolition, but why was this? not, as I apprehend, because of their alleged inutility, or of any inherent weakness, but because of a fatal mistake to which orders at each ordination, acolytes, subdeacons, deacons, and priests, and they are singularly interesting and valuable, because they frequently mention the different monasteries from whence the candidates proceeded. They are well worthy of more time and attention than I could bestow upon them.

they had for generations clung. Proud as they were in the magnitude of their possessions, the power and ambition of their abbots, the splendour of their churches, and the attractiveness of their services, they yet paved the way for their own destruction, which, not heeding riches or power, came on slowly but steadily, and at last did its appointed work. And the primary cause of this was, as I take it, the overweening desire of the monasteries to free themselves from the wholesome discipline of episcopal visitation. Papal exemptions were eagerly sought to free them from this supposed interference, and many and bitter were the contests which placed the monastic and episcopal systems in unfriendly relations. The Chronicle of Evesham and the history of St. Augustine's Canterbury, among others, show us how this antagonism was fostered by the abbots, who carried things with a high hand, rendered higher still by these papal exemptions. Of this we have an apt illustration in the time of Richard, archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of Henry II. In a letter which this prelate wrote to Pope Alexander III., about the year 1180, he complains first of the abbot of Malmesbury refusing obedience to the bishop of Salisbury, and then he inveighs bitterly against exemptions in these strong terms:—

“ Adversus primates et episcopos intumescunt abbates,

The celebrated bishop Grosseteste also manfully upheld the claims of the bishops to the visitation of monasteries, and not without reason, as is shown in his letters.² Breach of monastic rules and habits of luxury found no favour with this prelate, and when he was supposed to be most severe and exacting, it was indeed one of his kindest acts, because it was the uplifting of the chastening rod of an offended but not unforgiving parent, against a wayward and headstrong child. Well had it been for his spiritual children if they had listened to fatherly admonition.

And so it was that the monasteries of England laid the foundation for their own destruction which otherwise might have been averted, and the monastic system, as a recognized institution, ceased to exist.

Whether it is better for a man to accept the responsibilities of such social position as chance may have given him, and to battle boldly with life and its circumstances, or whether he should rather retire from the busy scene, and seek for happiness and peace in the tranquillity of the cloister, has often been the subject of much discussion, and as yet has never been satisfactorily answered ; to many undoubtedly monasticism would be simply a trap and a snare and an occasion of falling, because it suits not their genius, neither have they a special vocation that way ; while on the other hand there are those earnest and devoted persons to whom, after the practice of their religious duties, the world in its varied aspects presents but few attractions, and who would find an especial charm in a monk's life, because to them that life is one of the most noble and magnificent that can be conceived ; noble for its entire abnegation and sacrifice of self, and magnificent because it is constantly marked by acts of mercy and love unheeded by mortal eye, but which yet win a smile of approbation from the Holy Angels whose seat is ever before the throne of our Father in Heaven.

However, I am not at liberty here, neither is it my wish, to discuss the lawfulness of monasticism ; I have rather to deal with the fortunes and progress of the ancient and honourable abbey of Gloucester, as set before the reader in these volumes.

The present work consists of two parts, the history, and the cartulary of St. Peter's, Gloucester. The history is printed and described in volume I., and the cartulary now remains to be spoken of.

It is a finely written manuscript of the latter part of the thirteenth century, in good preservation, containing 337 leaves, of which some few, both at the commencement and the end, are mere fly leaves containing entries at various periods much later than that of the cartulary itself. The caligraphy is excellent, and the rubricated letters together with the floriated borders to the pages are worthy of remark. A fac-simile of the first page forms a frontispiece to the first volume of this work. With regard to the contents of this cartulary, the method of arrangement is anything but lucid or artistic; there is a system followed, but the reason for it is not apparent, while its defects are most conspicuous.

The first part of the manuscript contains charters of donation to the monastery, classified alphabetically according to localities, this is continued to folio 180; then a blank page or two occur, where is entered an inquisition of the twenty-fourth year of Henry VIII., after which there is another collection of charters, also arranged alphabetically; this takes us to folio 228. Another section is then started containing papal bulls, and also various charters of donation, pleadings, and miscellaneous documents. Following this is a series of extents of manors belonging to St. Peter's, these are valuable for the minuteness with which they describe the lands, and the services incident thereto. We then have very curious and interesting rules concerning the management of manors; and the manuscript concludes with a miscellaneous selection of pleadings and other matters written on the fly leaves before mentioned, at various times and by various hands.

These arbitrary divisions or sections are not uncommon in monastic cartularies, there is a similar arrangement in the Ramsey cartulary now preserved in the Public Record Office, but it is certainly none of the best. A simple chronological sequence would have been much more intelligible, and would have saved the scribe from the unnecessary repetitions which abound in the Gloucester cartulary. With regard to the exact period at which the manuscript in question was compiled, and by whom, it is not possible now to speak with any certainty. I am inclined, however, to ascribe it to the period of abbot John de Gamages (1284-1306). With the exception of the miscellaneous documents written on fly leaves and blank pages, about which there is no doubt whatever that they were entered at much more recent times, there is no charter in the cartulary proper of a later date than this abbot. And we find in the history of St. Peter's,¹ that among the numerous gifts of abbot Gamages to the church, there were three books mentioned, the Legend of the Saints, Transcripts of Charters, and Constitutions of King Edward. Now we may not be far wrong in seeking to identify the cartulary with the second of these volumes. The first is quite out of the question, the third will not at all accord, but the title of the second cannot be said to be otherwise than applicable, and until cause be shown to the contrary, I shall not think myself rash in assuming that the identity is fairly established. However, before disposing of this part of the subject, it will be expedient to describe briefly four other manuscript volumes which also relate to St. Peter's, and which are now in the possession of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester Cathedral.

Nos. 1 and 2 are manuscripts compiled about the year 1393, and are most probably the registers which are referred to in the history as having been compiled afresh by abbot Froucester.²

No. 1 is divided into two sections, the first is composed mainly of royal charters, commencing with the foundation charter of king Ethelred, which I have already printed,¹ and ending with an inspeximus by Richard II, of proceedings in the Exchequer relating to the vacancies of the abbey ; the second section comprises private charters of donation, agreements, presentations to churches, resignations of livings, and other ecclesiastical documents, all of them having immediate relation to St. Peter's. This volume I have no hesitation whatever in identifying with the one mentioned in the history,² because its contents perfectly tally with what we there find specified. The history in speaking of Froucester, says, " Et pro vacatione ecclesiæ quod gratiose et mirabiliter fuerat magnis laboribus et sumptuosis expensis prosecutum, et ad finem ingeniose perductum, ac etiam in curia domini comitis de Stafford placitum de curia tenenda de tribus septimanis in Newport, necnon et alia diversa quæ prolonga erant narranda ut in capsula inde confecta, et Walteri Froucestre intitulata, et in archivis ecclesiæ condita plenius continentur." This proceeding relative to the vacancies is evidently the one before referred to, and the plea concerning the holding of the court of Newport is also found in a subsequent part of the same manuscript. The old title, however, cannot be compared, because the manuscript has been recently rebound, but there can be no doubt that, had the ancient binding been preserved, we should have seen the words Walteri Froucestre on the back, as mentioned in the Historia ; however, without this, I think the proof of identity is sufficient.

No. 2 is a thicker volume in the same hand, but compiled on a very different principle. It contains ten distinct registers, namely, those of the sacristan, the almoner of Standish, the hostillar, the sub-almoner, the master of the works, the chamberlain, the refectoriar, the infirmarer, the master of the chapel, and the præcentor.

² Ante, vol. i. p. 55.

Altogether it comprises more than 1,000 charters relating to St. Peter's, some of them as early as William I. It would thus appear that it was not the custom to throw all the revenues of the monastery into one common fund, and then to apply them as need required, but it was in the discretion of any benefactor to specify the particular channel into which his charity should flow, be it infirmary, sacristy, or otherwise; or if he had no choice, then the abbey itself apportioned the gift to such fund as seemed most to require augmentation.

No. 3 contains the register of abbot Braunche (A.D. 1500–1510), and is entitled thus, “Regestrum actorum tam temporalium quam spiritualium Thomæ Braunche, permissione divina electi in abbatem monasterii Sancti Petri Gloucestræ, ultimo die Augusti, anno Domini millesimo quingentesimo, tempore Johannis Walden capellani dicti abbatis, et Willielmi Heywode ejus secratorii, etc.”

This register contains copies or entries of numerous abbey leases, presentations to vicarages, grants of corro-dies, manumissions, and other documents relating to the possessions of St. Peter's during the abbacy of Braunche.

In No. 3 is also contained the register of abbot Newton (A.D. 1510–1513), entitled thus, “Regestrum actorum tam spiritualium quam temporalium reverendi in Christo patris domini Johannis Newton, Sacræ Theologiae Professoris, electi in abbatem monasterii Sancti Petri Gloucestræ, penultimo die mensis Julii, anno Domini millesimo quingentesimo decimo, et confirmati vicesimo secundo die Novembris, ac installati sexto die Decembris, anno Domini supradicto, magna controversia prædicta electione inter dictum reverendum patrem et quendam dompnum Johannem Hunteleye adtunc commonachum et cellerarium dicti monasterii non obstante.” Its contents are similar to those of Braunche's register.

No. 4 is the register of William Malverne, the last abbot of Gloucester (A.D. 1514 to the dissolution), and contains similar instruments.

In the year 1800, in answer to the questions of the Commissioners on the Public Records, the Registrar of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester replied, that "there are no original records whatever in their possession of the nature alluded to by order of the Committee, but there are four manuscript books in the custody of the Dean and Chapter, containing copies of the records, etc., herein-after mentioned." The description which then follows does not tally in every respect with the four Gloucester manuscripts of which I have before given a slight outline, indeed one I cannot at all reconcile. I will take them in the order followed by the Registrar in his return.

He says that the first is an ancient register, which appears to have been compiled in the year 1397, and contains copies of the royal charters and confirmations to the church of Gloucester, beginning with the original charter of the foundation of the church by king Ethelred, and continued down to the reign of Richard II. This there is no difficulty in identifying with Gloucester MS. No. 1.

The second book, according to the Registrar, contains copies of various writs and other legal proceedings, about the reign of Edward I., and the laws and customs for the internal regulation of the monastery.

It also contains the Statutes de Scaccario; Distictiones Scaccarii; Statuta de Exonia; Statuta de Itinere; Statuta de Finibus; De Presentibus vocatis ad warrantiam; Statuta de Quo warranto; De Juratis et Assisis extra Comitatum; De Antiquo Dominico Coronæ; Circumspecte Agatis; De Regia Prohibitione; De vasto facto in Custodia; De Gaveleto in Londonia; De Anno et Die Bissextili; Consuetudines Kancie; De Moneta; Articuli de Tonsura Monetæ; De Cohæredibus; De Militibus faciendis; Statuta Armorum in Tornamentis;

De Conspiratoribus cum breve ; De Conspiratoribus aliter ; Capita Itineris quæ tangunt Coronam ; Officium Coronatoris ; Statutum de Petentibus Admitti ; De Terris mortuandis ; De Protectionibus Domini Regis. After this follow the proceedings on a view of Frankpledge ; the Manner of doing Homage and Fealty ; the Assize of Bread, &c. &c. ; Assize of Mort d'Auncestor ; Bastardy ; The Office of Steward ; Of Relief, Socage, &c. &c. And then the first part of this book concludes with a statement of the Liberties of England.

The second part of this book contains copies of the statutes during the reigns of Edward III., Richard II., and Henry IV., and during the first and second years of Henry V.

This book I have never seen ; it certainly is not one of the four Gloucester manuscripts now before me, but where it now is I have not been able to discover. Its contents, if correctly described, would be highly interesting, and I regret that I have not been able to refer to it, particularly as it seems to relate to the internal arrangements of the monastery.

The third book is said to contain copies of the grants from several kings, and from various persons of divers estates, fee farm rents, &c., to the abbey of Gloucester, the originals of most of which are preserved with the muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester, and were made probably about the time of the Conquest. This description, though no date is mentioned, will accord with Gloucester Cathedral manuscript No. 2.

The fourth book is said to contain a register of the acts of the abbot of Gloucester, as well spiritual as temporal, between the years 1501 and 1514. This is unquestionably the Gloucester volume No. 3, containing the registers of abbots Braunche and Newton ; but a difficulty now presents itself,—the Record Report says nothing about Malverne's register (Gloucester MS. No. 4), while it gives a lengthy description of a book (No. 2) which I can nowhere find. There is either some strange carelessness or misdescription which I cannot explain, or else Malverne's register has been substituted for the book No. 2 at some period since the year 1800. But even then the book No. 2 must be in existence somewhere.

There was also undoubtedly an early register of which we now can find no trace, but which was in existence at some time later than the period of the cartulary now printed. In the year 1380 there was a manumission of Richard le Hayward of Wottone,¹ and against this document a note is written in a later hand, stating that it was to be found in "registro Boyfeld, fol. vi^{to}." This reference is precise enough, but unfortunately I cannot discover the manuscript to which it refers.

Again there were without doubt registers for abbots Morton, Morwent, Boulers, and the others, but I can only chronicle their non-existence.

There is in the possession of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester, besides the four volumes before described, a series of original deeds with seals attached, in excellent condition, all relating to St. Peter's. They are mounted in large books formed of cartridge paper, with cavities for the reception of the seals, and much judgment has been used in their preservation. I have not been able to examine them very minutely, but I believe that among them there will be found the originals of some of the charters printed in these volumes.

Again the Public Record Office possesses a small collection of original charters with seals attached, formerly belonging to St. Peter's.

The earliest document relating to the monastery, namely, king Ethelred's foundation charter, in the year of our Lord 681, and confirmed by Burgred, king of Mercia, in 872, is printed in the first volume of this work (App. to Introduction, No. I.), but the text is, as will be observed, very corrupt, the names of places mentioned in it being perverted in a very gross manner, some of them almost beyond the possibility of identification.

Offa, Ethelbald, and Kynred, kings of Mercia, were in their time benefactors to St. Peter's, as appears by the calendar of donations, and in the year 821, fifteen hides in Standish "sub Ezimbury" were given by Beornulph, king of Mercia, at the time when St. Peter's was denuded of clerks. About the same period the manor of Frocester was given to St. Peter's by Rabanus Anglicus Revenswart, brother of king Beornulph. In the year 981, Elfleda, king Ethelred's sister, who was then a barren old woman and oppressed by poverty, gave to the monastery the manor of Hynetone. But when five men were required from thence to attend the king's expedition, they could not be found, and the clerks who then governed St. Peter's, came and sought for the old woman, who on Christmas day, when the king was banqueting, came and fell down at his feet, and besought him that the land should thenceforth be free from such burden, which favour was at once granted.¹

The fortunes of St. Peter's during the first four centuries of its existence were, as we learn, considerably chequered: in its origin a nunnery, it flourished under royal protection and patronage for a time; then came a period of desolation, when national tumults and disturbances drove the nuns from their peaceful home; afterwards it was placed under the rule of secular clergy, who in their turn gave way to Benedictine monks introduced to St. Peter's in the year 1022 by Wolstan, bishop of Worcester, with the permission of king Canute. In the cartulary of Bath abbey, now preserved in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, there is a very interesting document relating to this change in the constitution of St. Peter's ; it is an agreement between Wulstan, bishop of Worcester, and the abbots of Evesham, Chertsey, Bath, Pershore, Winchcombe, and Gloucester, and the dean of Worcester, to adopt the Benedictine rule, and to be in unity as if all the seven monasteries were one monastery, and to be "quasi cor unum et anima una." They agreed to sing two masses every week in each monastery for all the brothers, on Monday and Friday, and the brother who was "capitula mæsse wuca" was to perform these masses for the brothers living, and also for every departed brother, as if they all were together in one monastery ; thus beautifully illustrating the doctrine of the Communion of Saints, which the Church has ever proclaimed in her solemn creeds, teaching us the belief that the righteous who pass away from our presence here, yet are with us in spirit, mingling their prayers with ours before the eternal throne of the Most High. The abbots also professed obedience to God and to their bishop for their common need, that is, that each of them should perform, and for his own account buy a hundred masses, and bathe a hundred needy men, and feed them and shoe them. And each to sing himself seven masses, and for thirty days set his meat before him, and a penny upon the meat. The document appears to be incomplete, for the names of the brothers at Evesham, Chertsey, and Bath only are appended. The following is a copy :

The return of the possessions of St. Peter's, as given in Domesday book and also in the Calendar of donations,¹ tells us with what success the abbacy of Serlo was attended in obtaining for the youthful Benedictine house lands and manors in addition to those it already had from the gift of its early benefactors; it numbered lands in Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, Herefordshire, and the remote region of Hampshire, and soon afterwards the church of St. Martin in the Vintry in London and lands in Essex were added.

The method in which Domesday was compiled receives a curious illustration from the Gloucester cartulary, in fact one of the returns in that grand and memorable record is alleged to be incorrect, and this in no unimportant degree. We are told that William I. granted to St. Peter's and to abbot Wilstan Nympsfield (Nymdesfeld) in Gloucestershire, with sac and soc, but in the year 1087 Roger de Berkeley the elder caused it to be described in

Domesday as among the king's lands, "ad mensam regis," unknown to abbot Serlo; however in the year 1093 it was restored to the monastery by Eustace de Berkeley, "tempore Serlonis abbatis;" thus showing evidently that whether the false return was made wittingly or not, at all events Serlo did not allow it to remain unnoticed or unremedied. To many persons this misstatement in Domesday and its subsequent correction may seem of little moment, but it really involves an important legal point, as I shall endeavour to show. It is sometimes necessary in a court of law to adduce evidence in support of land being of that peculiar tenure called "ancient demesne," and the only way in which it can be established is by an appeal to Domesday. "The tenure of ancient demesne," says Scriven in his work on Copyholds,¹ "is confined to such lands as were held in socage of manors belonging to the crown in the reign of Edward the Confessor, and in the reign of William the Conqueror; and whenever a question arises as to the particular lands being ancient demesne, it is to be decided by the production of Domesday book; wherein the lands which were in the possession of king Edward are called terræ regis Edwardi, and those which were in the possession of William the Conqueror are called terræ regis."

Now supposing a dispute arose at the present day as to whether Nympsfield were ancient demesne or not, it is a matter for consideration how far our courts would allow the statements in this monastic chronicle to influence their decision. I am quite aware of the doctrine that there can be no appeal from Domesday book, and no averment made against it, but is this rule never to admit of qualification or relaxation? If the averment be supported strongly by collateral evidence, I see no reason why Domesday may not receive correction; it is a valuable record, but it is not infallible.

From the period of Serlo to the dissolution the charters and other instruments relating to St. Peter's are too numerous, and are frequently of too common-place an order to be described seriatim, or to be woven into a narrative, but a few are worthy of notice as illustrating in a special manner the history of the monastery. I allude to the charters of confirmation granted by kings Stephen and Henry II., by the archbishop of Canterbury, and by Gilbert de Clare, earl of Hertford.¹ Each charter specifies all the possessions confirmed, thereby affording us the means of comparing the extent of the monastery property at different periods.

The privileges enjoyed by St. Peter's were both numerous and important. The monks were to have the sole liberty of fishing in all their streams, as well in the Severn as elsewhere, and they were to have all sturgeon caught there. They had also the tithes of all venison taken in the forest of Dean; and a fair and market at Northleach. Protection was granted them by king Stephen and by Henry III., and by Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester. Their land was to be free from all toll, carriage, summage, conduct, and all other exactions; and they were to have rights of warren over all their lands. They were to have freedom from toll over all the lands of Bernard de Novo Mercato in the honour of Brecknock, and over all the lands of the earl of Mellent in Wyche, and also for whatever they purchased in the city of Bristol in the way of food, clothing, or timber under a charter of William earl of Gloucester, who also granted them a similar freedom for everything they bought or sold in Bristol, Cardiff, and Newport. John earl of Mortain also freed them from toll over all his lands in the same towns.

Towards the end of the reign of Henry III. disputes sprang up between the municipal authorities of Gloucester and the monastery touching the exemption from toll, which the monks claimed under royal charter. The bailiffs of the city were possibly not aware of the exemption, or, perhaps, they were oppressed with feelings of jealousy that the cattle and goods of the monastery should traverse their streets and bridges and be sold in their markets toll-free; at all events they were determined to try the question, and in the thirty-second year of king Henry III. they levied a distress upon the abbot and his men for toll, which proceeding was contested by the monastery in a court of law. William de Sumery and Thomas de Evesham, bailiffs of Gloucester, were summoned to answer the abbot for having exacted toll from his men, namely, for every horse bought or sold in the city twopence, for every ox one penny, and for five sheep one penny, and for one quarter of corn one penny, and a halfpenny if any of their men brought corn there to be sold; and the abbot proffered in evidence various royal charters of exemption from any toll, passage, or custom. The bailiffs, however, justified their proceedings, asserting that they held the city of Gloucester from the king's grant, and that they were seised of the toll in question, but there seems to have been no verdict.¹

During the abbacy of John de Gamages (A.D. 1284–1307), various grave questions as to episcopal visitation arose between the bishop of Worcester and some of the monasteries in his diocese. In the year 1302, during the avoidance of the see of Worcester, John the prior of the same place visited the monasteries of Tewkesbury, Gloucester, and Winchcombe, and the canons of Cirencester, but they closed their doors against him, alleging that they had been visited twice before in the same year; and in the following year, the abbots of Gloucester and Tewkesbury were condemned by the Court of Arches for resisting the visitation. This quarrel continued for some years, for in 1309, the prior again sought to uphold his right, and the archbishop of Canterbury gave judgment in his favour. But even this did not check the resistance of Gloucester, for on December 2, 1313, the prior of Worcester issued his mandate to the abbot of St. Peter's, requesting him to admit the said prior with becoming reverence on the Saturday next after the feast of St. Lucy. The abbot replied on the 8th, that he would obey the mandate, so far as he was bound by right, and not otherwise, "saving always the right of ourselves" and our monastery." This was followed by a monition from the prior, warning the abbot to permit the office of visitation to proceed, and citing him to appear at Worcester under penalty of the greater excommunication, but monitions and citations seemed to be of little avail; the last extremity was resorted to, and St. Peter's was pronounced excommunicate by bishop Maidstone at his court at Kempsey, in 1314. However it seems that a composition was subsequently entered into and confirmed by the pope, by which the rights of the prior were conceded.¹

In connexion with this dispute we find in our cartulary a curious instrument by which the four monasteries, Gloucester, Cirencester, Worcester, and Lanthony, united in placing every obstacle in the way of the bishop and his officers, and engaged to pay in equal proportions the expenses of such opposition. If the bishop pursued them, the defence was to be taken up in the Roman court, or that of Canterbury, or elsewhere, and they were examining the original authorities, and its author deserves considerable credit for having shaped into a popular and pleasing form a large mass of valuable antiquarian material.

¹ These particulars I have gathered from Fosbrooke's History of Gloucester, and also from Noake's Monastery and Cathedral of Worcester (p. 86). The latter work appears to be exceedingly well executed, so far as I can form an opinion without

not under any pretence to invite to dinner any officer or minister of the bishop, or to eat with him or to make him any present. Ten pounds a year were to be subscribed from the commune of each monastery, and handed over to the custody of the sub-priors, and by them placed in the monastery of St. Peter's, Gloucester, where, by permission of the abbot, a chest, secured by four locks, was to be kept for that purpose, each sub-prior having a key. Then follow the appointments of proctors for carrying out the business.¹

In the year 1380, there was a dispute between the crown and St. Peter's, relative to the vacancies, which arose in a peculiar manner. It appears that on July 16, 34 Edward I. (1306), they were granted by letters patent to the prior and convent, rendering for each vacancy, if it should last for four months, 200 marks, and so in proportion. But on February 28, 2 Edward III. (1328), in consideration of the expenses which the abbey had been at on the burial of king Edward II. in St. Peter's, a fresh patent was issued, granting the vacancies to the prior and convent on very reduced terms, namely, for each vacancy, if it should last for one year, 100 marks, and so in proportion for a longer or shorter time.²

On the resignation of abbot Horton, which took place in the year 1377, the escheator for the district claimed from the abbey 200 marks for the vacancy, according to the rate prescribed by the patent of Edward I.; he either was ignorant of the subsequent patent, or else tried to extort more from the abbey than was justly due; at all events the law was appealed to by the crown, and in Michaelmas term, 1380, a process was issued from the Court of Exchequer against the abbot and convent for the payment of the 200 marks. The king pleaded the patent of Edward I.; and that it was found from the account of Ralph Waleys, escheator for Gloucester, Hereford, and the Marches of Wales, from February 2, 51 Edward III., to November 26 following, that the abbey became vacant on October 26, 1 Richard II. (1377), by the cession of abbot Thomas de Horton; and that on December 31 following the king took the fealty of John Boyfeld, and restored him the temporalities; and so the abbey was vacant for sixty-seven days, viz., for two months and eleven days; and it was not found that any money was paid upon the vacancy; therefore a writ of scire facias issued to the abbot and convent, enjoining them to show cause why the fine should not be paid. Whereupon the abbot and convent appeared, and said that Horton was abbot until November 8, when he resigned, and that they ought not to pay anything to the king for the vacancy after that day, because of the patent of Edward III., but they were prepared to satisfy the king for the vacancy after that day proportionably, according to such letters patent.

The court, after taking time to consider, gave judgment in favour of the abbot and convent, namely, that they were not liable to pay the 200 marks, under the provisions of the patent of Edward I.¹

The following mandate prescribing special prayers to be used for king Henry VII. is interesting; it is taken from abbot Braunche's register.

From July to November 1510 great confusion existed within the walls of St. Peter's with regard to the election of a successor to abbot Braunche. The two candidates were John Newton, D.D., and John Huntley, cellarer of the house, but after a violent opposition and an appeal to the bishop of Worcester, the contest was decided in favour of Newton, and he was duly confirmed and installed as abbot.

The proceedings on this election are contained in Newton's register, and from them we learn with certainty the number of monks in St. Peter's at that time, their names, and also how they voted, all of which is shown in the following list:—

Thus the majority was in favour of Newton. The royal assent to the election was granted on October 30, 1510, and on the 25th of November following, in the Lady Chapel of St. Mary Overy, Southwark, Richard bishop of Winchester, acting as commissary for the bishop of Worcester, who was beyond the seas, received the obedience of the new abbot and gave him solemn benediction in the presence of the abbots of Reading and Winchcombe and others.

During the progress however of this election contention ran so high in the monastery that the royal authority stepped in and commanded that all disorder should at once cease, as appears by the following mandate :—

“ To our trusty and welbeloved in God the prior “ now being president of the convent of our monastery
 “ of Gloucestre.

“ By the king.

“ Trusty and welbeloved in God we grete you well.
 “ And where as we be credibly enfourmed, that by “ reason of a division and parte taking in the eleccion “ lately passed within that our monastery, diverse and “ many grete excesses and enormites have ensued, and “ yet contynueth amonges sundry the brethren of the “ same, not oonely contrary to the good ordre and obser“ vance of perfeite religion, lett and hindraunce of divine “ service there, but also to the clere subvercioun and “ utter destruccion of our said monastery, onles spedie “ remedie be provided and made for the reformation and “ redresse of suche enormities now used there. We “ taking respect and regard that the said monastery “ is of our fundacion, and for that cause not willing the “ same to be disordred spiritually or temporally, and “ remembring that to you as president of the chapitre
 “ there it apperteigneth to ordre and establishe religious “ rule and governaunce within that place during the “ vacacioun of the same, considering also that by con“ tempt and disobeisinaunce of your power and auctoritie “ audacitie and boldnes is geven to diverse religious “ persons of our said monastery insolently to neglect “ their profession of monasticall obedience and litle to “ regard their dute to God in thobservaunce of their reli-“ gioun, first on Goddis behalf, and secundarily by “ our royall auctorite and power fundatorie, exhorte, “ charge, and comaund you that all such variaunces, “ parcialities, divisions, and debates utterly excluded,

 “ extinct, and sett apart, ye see God duely to be served
 “ with divine service there, peaseable rule and govern-“ aunce to be kept amonges you according to the rules “ of your religioun and the goodes of the house to be “ surely and sauflly observed and kept to thuse, utilite,
 “ and profite of the same during the vacacion thereof.
 “ Latting you wit that we, by thadvice of our counseill “ intend to have such order, forme, and manere as have “ byn taken in your said eleccion groundely tried and “ examined, and to take suche direccion therein as to the “ lawes of God and of Holy Church it shall appertein.
 “ Nevertheles in the mean tyme and season we woll
 “ and commaunde you to see the premisses effectuely
 “ to be done within that our monastery as ye woll “ aunswere before God and avoid our highe displeasure.
 “ And in cace any religious persoune or persounes being “ under youre auctorite and obeisaunce shall contemp“ tuously disobey you in thexecucion of your said auc-“ torite, we wolle that ye, setting apart all feare, mede, “ drede, and affection, see him or them condignely to be “ punished according to the rules and statutes of your “ religion. Not failing thus to doo as ye tender our “ pleasure.

In the fourth year of Henry VIII. the monastery had to furnish its quota of men toward the formation of the navy which was being prepared against the French; the following documents from Newton's register are printed here in illustration :—

“ The kinge’s honorable letteres send unto John abbot

In the fifth year of Henry VIII. there were serious disturbances at Gloucester concerning rights of common, the servants of the abbot and convent being violently assaulted and ill-used by order of the municipal authorities of Gloucester ; but the dispute was settled by a reference to the abbot and prior of Winchcombe, who, in the month of October in the same year, made their final award, which, with the articles of complaint and other documents, are here printed from Newton's register.

And now the story of St. Peter's, Gloucester, draws rapidly to a close. Having existed for more than eight centuries under different forms, in poverty and in wealth, in meanness and in magnificence, in misfortune and in success, it finally succumbed to the royal will; the day came, and that a drear winter day, when its last mass was sung, its last censer waved, its last congregation bent in rapt and lowly adoration before the altar there, and doubtless as the last tones of that day's evensong died away in the vaulted roof, there were not wanting those who lingered in the solemn stillness of the old massive pile, and who, as the lights disappeared one by one, felt that for them there was now a void which could never be filled, because their old abbey, with its beautiful services, its frequent means of grace, its hospitality to strangers, and its loving care for God's poor, had passed away like an early morning dream, and was gone for ever. So, probably, thought St. Peter's last abbot, William Malverne, who, when the time came for his resignation, had not the heart himself to make the necessary surrender, but shrank from the business, and left it to the conduct of the prior, thereby losing a pension from the king, that monarch, as Willis says, "being not willing to oblige one whom he found so stiff in maintaining the rights of the abbey."

The instrument testifying the acknowledgment of the royal supremacy is still preserved in the Public Record Office; the following is a copy:—

"Quum ea sit non solum Christianæ religionis et pietatis ratio, sed nostræ etiam obedientiæ regula domino regi nostro Henrico Octavo (cui uni et soli post Christum Jesum Servatorem nostrum debemus universa) non modo omnimodam in Christo et eandem sinceram, integram, perpetuamque animi devotionem, fidem et observantiam, honorem, cultum, reverentiam præstemus, sed etiam de eadem fide et obedientia nostra rationem, (quotiescunque postulabitur,) reddamus, et palam omnibus, (si res poscat,) libentissime testemur; noverint universi ad quos præsens scriptum pervenerit, quod nos Willielmus, permissione divina abbas monasterii Sancti Petri Gloucestræ et ejusdem loci conventus ordinis Sancti Benedicti Wigorniensis diœcesis, uno ore et voce, atque unanimi omnium consensu et assensu, hoc scripto nostro sub sigillo nostro communi in domo nostra capitulari dato, pro nobis et successoribus nostris omnibus et singulis imperpetuum profiteamur, ac fideliter promittimus et spondemus, nos

The surrender of which I have before spoken cannot be found among the Augmentation Office records, neither does it appear to be enrolled on the Close Roll as was customary with these instruments; I must therefore depend upon Browne Willis's authority for the statement that abbot Malverne refused to make the surrender, and so lost his pension; but I have no doubt of its correctness, for it is confirmed by the following list of pensions granted in the thirty-first year of Henry VIII., wherein the abbot's name is expressly omitted.

The fine book, now preserved in the Public Record Office, and known as Cardinal Pole's Pension Book, contains a list of pensions payable to the late monks and officers of St. Peter's, and forms an interesting sequel to the former list. It is dated in the month of February 1556, and is the last record which tells us aught of the inmates of the monastery of Gloucester. The following is an extract :—

As to the inner life of St. Peter's, and its everyday duties and occupations, we have but very slender materials to deal with. The rule of St. Benedict, which we know was there followed, is well known to scholars in all its details, but it was subject to additions or qualifications both general and special; general, as when Lanfranc issued his celebrated statutes for the regulation of Benedictine monasteries, which, although nominally and primarily addressed to Christ Church, Canterbury, yet were intended to apply to the whole kingdom; and special, as when certain monasteries received from the pope or archbishop of the province injunctions for their guidance. In Lanfranc's preface to his statutes he says that he has added and changed a few things, and those principally with regard to the celebration of certain feasts with greater excellence in the cathedral of Canterbury, but he allows great liberality in the adoption of any change, because of the difficulty of ensuring a perfect uniformity among the churches, from various causes, "hinc est quod nulla fere ecclesia imitari aliam per omnia potest."

The archbishop, however, looks to the spirit rather than to the letter, for he tells the monks that the one thing needful is to preserve inviolate those things necessary to salvation, that is faith, contempt of the world, charity, chastity, humility, patience, obedience, repentance for sins and humble confession of the same, frequent prayers, a becoming silence, and such like ; where these are observed, there may the rule of St. Benedict be said to be best observed, whatever variations might exist in minor details.¹

But to return to St. Peter's. Abbot Reginald de Homme (1263-1284) made the following ordinance relative to the obits of his monks. Immediately upon the death of any professed brother letters were to be written and delivered to the interior almoner (elemosinario intrinseco), who by means of suitable messengers should cause the same to be sent without delay to all the dependent priories of St. Peter's and other neighbouring houses of whatever order, and especially to those confederated with St. Peter's. And because this could not be done speedily without some expense, it was ordered that these obedientiaries should make a small contribution among themselves, namely, the cellarer twelpence, the almoner twelpence, the chamberlain sixpence, the sacrist sixpence, the sub-almoner sixpence, the præcentor threepence, the infirmarer threepence, and this money was to be paid to the sub-almoner on the day of such deceased brother's burial, without any excuse or delay, and in default to be doubled. The whole affair also to be under the direction of the sub-almoner.²

On July 28, 1301, the archbishop of Canterbury issued injunctions for the governance of the monastery, in which, after stating that on visiting the monastery he found certain ordinances laid down which the abbot and convent besought him to confirm, he says that with a few additions and alterations which he saw fit to make, he would adopt these ordinances as his own, and confirm them to the monastery.

First, none were to be admitted to the monastic order unless they were of approved life and manners, for the examination of whom prudent and skilful men were to be appointed, who would without favour try the applicants, as well in letters as in song,¹ and the other conditions required under such circumstances. The abbot also, with the prior and others, was to inquire diligently concerning other conditions, namely, secular debts, bodily infirmities contagious or incurable, solemn vows, defect or mutilation of members, and other particulars. None of the brethren were to make use of the secular power, either secretly or openly, in order to compel the reception of any candidate, and any offender in this respect was to be gravely punished by the abbot.

Secondly, that anyone revealing the secrets of the chapter should, on his first and second conviction, be punished at the will of his superiors, and on his third conviction be excluded from the chapter while secret affairs were being considered, and if an habitual offender he was to be excluded from the chapter for the remainder of his life during the discussion of secret affairs. No secular servant of the monastery was to intermeddle with things relating to the chapter, or to obtain the performance of anything by monks which should be done by the chapter. Anyone convicted of a breach of this rule was to be removed from his office, whatever it might be. Also when the affairs of the monastery were treated of, both great and small, the rule of St. Benedict was in this respect to be observed.

Thirdly, the common seal was never to be affixed to any instrument except in the chapter and in the presence of the greater number of the brethren. Pensions and allowances were not to be granted except upon a very manifest and urgent necessity to be approved by the bishop, after a competent deliberation held by the brethren. The deeds and writings concerning these things were not to be signed except in the presence of the whole monastery, and they were all to be registered before being delivered out, transcripts being made by the abbot's chaplain, and preserved carefully in the treasury.

Fourthly, the abbot to have only five squires,¹ each to be provided with a horse. The first to be steward of the household, prudent, skilful, and wise. The second to be marshal, who should every day see to the account of the expenses in the abbot's house before the chaplain and the cook, when the abbot was at home; and also see to the number of those dining in the hall, that there be equality in the number of dishes, to be computed by the abbot's cook. The third squire to be cook. The other two to be at the disposal of the abbot, both at table and in the chamber, one however to attend specially to his bed. But he was not to have an under-chamberlain with a robe of the suit of valets, because the palfridary² he had was sufficient for that purpose. The abbot was also to have one pantler, one butler, one under cook, who should also be "salsarius;" and a walking smith or farrier (*ferrarium peditem*³) without a horse, and a messenger without a horse. And he was to have only four palfridaries for himself and his chaplains, with as many horses, and more, as should seem necessary; so that the number of "garciones" "ad robas" should not be thereby increased. The abbot also was to have only one long cart, so that the second cart should be entirely let out as of old.⁴

³ Compare a line in Dryden, "The smiths and armorers on pal-freys ride." The ferrarius pedes in the text is evidently a smith or farrier who does not ride.

⁴ The abbot seems to have been somewhat unfortunate with regard to his carts, for we find a memorandum (vol. iii. p. 276) that he lost in the king's service in Scotland a long cart well ironed, with four horses and three men; again, a good cart, with three horses and two men, were lost in the retinue of Gilbert de Clare while serving the king; and finally, a cart with three horses and two men were lost in the retinue of Hugh le Despencer, while in the king's service.

Fifthly, the abbots were not to have any separate goods or property against the custom of the monastery, and whatever lands or other possessions were acquired by any abbot were on his death or resignation to fall to his successor and thus become a part of the common stock.

Sixthly, when the abbot visited his priories and cells he was not to have with him more than nineteen horses, and no prior was to give money to him or any of his retinue. These things concerning the common seal and the disposition of the house and retinue of the abbot were to be strictly observed under pain of excommunication.

Seventhly, that the reading of the Holy Scriptures be more attended to at the abbot's table. All frivolous and unbecoming words to be totally prohibited in the abbot's presence, and any person speaking in such a manner to be restrained by the monks present. The abbot was to have eight sporting dogs and four harriers, who were to be kept by one attendant skilled in hunting, with one page only. No sporting dogs were to enter the abbot's hall, and all such intruders were to be turned out by the door keepers.

Eighthly, the fragments from the tables in the abbot's hall, the infirmary, the refectory, and from the table of the lay brethren, and other places where refreshments were held, were to be fully and faithfully collected by an honest servant sworn to the sub-almoner and prior. And because one person was not sufficient for this task clerks were to be had from the almonry chamber as required in order that the alms might be faithfully collected and distributed.¹ Those who defrauded the alms, or gave them away without licence, or wasted them, were to be punished gravely, and were to be kept for three consecutive Fridays fasting on bread and water, or to undergo such other condign punishment as the abbot or the president of the chapter should inflict.

" tis, deinde diversarum mensarum

Ninthly, the brethren eating flesh in the infirmary were to be waited upon by a lay brother or monk only, and not by a secular person, unless from great necessity, and then he was to be one who had grown old in the service and was likely to continue there always, as had been ordained previously by archbishop Killewardby. No clamorous voices were to be heard, or contentions, or wranglings, but conversation at dinner was allowed in a moderate degree, each brother confining his talk to his immediate neighbour. Offenders were to be proclaimed on the morrow in the chapter, and, when convicted before the president, they to be deprived of their "solatium."¹ Whenever the monks ate in the refectory for recreation, they were to consume two portions at the least in the refectory.

Tenthly, when any of the brethren were sent to cells to stay for a time, it was only to be done by the authority of the abbot, prior, sub-prior, the third prior, præcentor, and five cloistered monks, and when they were recalled the same authority was to be appealed to. They were not to remain in a cell more than a year, nor were they, in the same year when they were recalled, to be again sent to cells, unless strifes and contentions arose in those cells from which they retired, or unless it were

"mus, vas collectas hebdomadarii

"servandas, de quibus in exitum
"hebdomadæ suæ patellæ coquantur." In this case the fragments appear to have been utilized at the end of the week, but at Gloucester they seem to have been devoted entirely to charitable uses.

¹ I can find no proper equivalent for this word, therefore I leave it in its original Latin. Solatium appears to be the allowance of an aid to any monk to enable him the better to discharge the duties of his office, whatever it might be. Vide Ducange sub voce.

necessary on account of bodily infirmity that they should be sent out of the monastery. Outside priors also (priores forinseci), that is, priors of houses dependent upon St. Peter's, were, under a heavy penalty to be inflicted at the will of the abbot, to give to all brethren both sound and infirm all necessities according to the exigence of their state, including clothing and shoes if it had been customary to receive them from the principal monastery. The provisions of this article with regard to cells to be observed under pain of the greater excommunication.

Eleventhly, no brother, without leave first obtained from the abbot, or in his absence the prior, was to enter any house in the town of Gloucester but for good cause to be shown to his superior, and with a proper companion, nor was he to travel about the country unless accompanied by a brother, or clerk, or honest squire. The day for his return also was to be fixed, and if the time were exceeded he was to be punished gravely, unless excused by manifest necessity.

Twelfthly, all those who were detected playing at chess, dice, crossbows, archery, or such like, were to be punished by being deprived for the two following days of their "solatium," also the use of silken purses, extravagant girdles, pointed knives, and all other things repugnant to holy religion, was wholly interdicted under a penalty to be fixed at the will of the guardian of the order according to the measure of the delinquent's offence. And if an officer of the monastery saw any of these things worn by the brethren he was to cause them to be removed without delay.

Thirteenthly, "aids"¹ were to be offered to the brethren as well within by the abbot and prior, as without by the obedientiaries in turns according as their behaviour and the honesty of their conversation, and the amount of their work in the choir and in the cloister, rendered them worthy.

Fourteenthly, the almonry of Standish was to be continued and kept up according to the ordinance made by abbot Thomas and confirmed by the bishop, and the manor was to be sustained, so that there might be no alterations unless from urgent necessity, and the whole assise due from that manor was to be distributed by the sub-almoner among the poor every week without diminution, and the sumptuous table kept at that manor, by which the alms were defrauded, was to be entirely abolished.

Fifteenthly, the brethren were to be supplied from the chamber with tunics¹ both coarse and fine, pilches² and shoes, stamins³ and breeches,⁴ and leggings thick and thin, ¹ These were under-garments in the fashion of shirts, sometimes with sleeves like those of coats, only fitting closer to the body. They resembled a mail-jacket in form, the longer reaching to the ankles, the shorter to the knees.

² A garment made of skins. Vide Ducange sub voce Pellucea. I am not quite prepared to say what particular part of the Benedictine dress is hereby meant; it was most probably a kind of cloak.

³ A shirt made of woollen and linen, an under-garment used instead of hair-cloth. Vide Abingdon Chronicle (Chron. and Mem.) vol. ii. p. 405. "Omnia sua vestimenta vetusta pauperibus erogabit, nullumque (exceptis femoralibus et staminibus) camerario resignabit." Vide also the Evesham Chronicle (Chron. and Mem.), p. 238, where we are told how the brethren were obliged to remain in the infirmary for want of frocks and cowls. "Unde ad probandum verbum is-

"Cilicinium vero vestimentum quod subtus ad carnem gestat monachus, communi locutione vocatur staminia, signat propriæ carnis mortificationem." Consult also Ducange sub voce. In the description of the first monastery at Abingdon (Abingdon Chronicle, ii. 273), the following passage occurs bearing upon our subject. "Habebant nigros pannos, sed non utebantur staminibus; pellicias habebant; jacebant super cilicia; habebant coopertoria cattina."

and those in the old style when a change was needed. Each monk was to have a frock and cowl once every year at the least, and a pair of travelling shoes every year and a half, and a pair of nailed boots every five years, and a couple of woollen garments¹ every four years at the least. Twelve coverlets were to be distributed by the chamberlain among the monks every year, and materials for the same when necessary, but the abbot and prior were at liberty to change oftener for the honour of the monastery. And in order that these distributions should be carried on properly, the priors, in company with the chamberlain, should ascertain which of the monks stood most in need of them. The cloth to be of a russet colour and no other. The cloaks² of the monks were to be of lambskin, dog skin, or rabbit skin, and the cut and the stitching of all these garments were to be uniform throughout the monastery. All old garments were to be given back when new ones were furnished, except pilches and leggings, which the monks had been accustomed to give away. The chamberlain was also to see that the garments were not too short, or narrow, or common, so that the honour of the monastery might not suffer, and the monks were to be careful to use their clothes properly and not to tear them. If any of the monks accepted garments from their friends as presents, or provided them for themselves, they were to mind that they matched in every respect, in cut, stitching, and colour, those furnished by the chamberlain. This and the last article were to be scrupulously observed under pain of the greater excommunication.

Sixteenthly, the hostillar was to see to the guests, and principally to the religious, that they were properly entertained in the hostillary. Those brethren who arrived early were to be entertained at the abbot's table or the infirmary, but those who arrived late were to be taken to the hostillary, and the hostillar was to give them proper attendance, eating and drinking with them if opportunity allowed, the under cellarer and the kitchener visiting them to see that nothing was wanting. And in order that the provisions delivered out for the use of the guests should not be wasted or pilfered by the attendants, as had used to be done, the hostillar was to have the charge of the bread and beer, so that the guests might be served quickly, and he was to have a companion with him to attend to the secular guests.

Seventeenthly, the account of the stewards of the community was to be audited on the morrow of All Souls, and the audit was to be continued until completion; four of the monks being appointed by the abbot and convent for this purpose, two of them being the least number before whom any account was to be rendered. Immediately after this, the account of the community was to be rendered and audited in like manner. And then, according to the receipts, an estimate was to be made of the expenditure for the following year as well in the kitchen as in the cellar for the abbot and the obedientiaries. Afterwards, the kitchener, the "magister

"villæ,"¹ the chamberlain, and other officials were in their order to render their accounts, all of which were to be completed before the Annunciation. All the accounts of stewards, the obedientiaries, and the community, were to be written by two sworn clerks, and were to follow one form, always beginning and ending at the same time. In order also that these accounts might be the more minutely examined, extents and rentals of all the manors were to be made and deposited in the treasury, and after the completion of an account it was to be committed to writing and read before the abbot and convent in chapter, that those who acquitted themselves well might be commended, while the ill-behaved and negligent were gravely punished, and deprived entirely of the hope of future office.

Eighteenthly, none of the officials of the monastery, either within or without, were to encumber their offices by sales of tithes or lands or grants of corrodies for terms or in perpetuity in any way, unless under pressing necessity, and then with the knowledge of the abbot and the consent of the chapter. Whosoever procured anything of this kind to be done fraudulently, pretending that he was burdened with debts when he was not, was, upon conviction, to be gravely punished, and suspended from office. The obedientiaries were not to be allowed the sale of tithes, wool, or similar goods, but for one year only, and such sale was to be made, not under the vendor's own seal, but under the common seal, with the knowledge of the abbot, and by the advice of the senior monks. The profits of each cure (alluding to the different departments of sacrist, chamberlain, hostillar, and others, as exemplified in the register B. before mentioned¹), as well in money as in horses and flocks and in other things, were, on the death or resignation of its administrators, to remain without any diminution, nor was any one on dismissal from his office to presume to transfer any of its revenues elsewhere. No monk or servant of the monastery was to have superfluous dogs, or to encourage troublesome whelps within the monastery or any of its manors, nor was any one to burden the manors with any animals without the knowledge of the abbot, the prior, or the cellarer. The obedientiaries also, whether within the monastery or without in the places pertaining to their offices, were not to be troublesome. They were not to have sporting dogs or harriers, nor more horses than were necessary; and all offenders in this respect were to be reprimanded; but if after the second time they did not reform they were to be suspended from office, and if contumacious to be dismissed altogether. All transgressors of this article were ipso facto excommunicate. Those also who had been guilty of mal-administration in their offices, or had unduly burdened the same with debts, were to be dismissed thence without hope of recall.

Nineteenthly, the infirmarer was to furnish the sick liberally with all necessaries, according to the requirements of each case, and according to the advice of the doctor, and if his provisions fell short, he was to appeal to the abbot or prior, who, if need be, would lose no time in making up the deficiency by a generous supply from the common stock, and the kitchenier and under-cellarer were to visit the sick every day in order to learn what diet was prescribed them by the doctors. The infirmary servants and others were to abstain from making a noise when they passed from the infirmary to the garden, and another entrance to the garden was to be made so that there might be nothing to disturb the sick wards.

Twentiethly, these ordinances were to be read openly in the chapter in the presence of all, four times a year, and copies sent to all the priors of cells, so that no person might plead ignorance of them, and thus set up an excuse for their infraction; and all transgressors were to be punished sharply, according to the gravity of their offence. Priors of cells neglecting the observance of the ordinances so far as they were applicable, were to be deposed from their office by the abbot at his visitation. If the prior or other officers of the monastery were deficient in their duty, they were to be warned twice, but if they offended a third time they were to be expelled without hope of ever again obtaining office.

Lastly, if the abbot, against whom accusations were not to be lightly admitted, were convicted of any breach of the foregoing ordinances, and could show no plain necessity or unavoidable excuse for the same, he was to be punished by perpetual deprivation, his rank giving him no privileges over the ordinary monks.

By a subsequent ordinance (Nov. 8, 1301) the number of squires, which had been fixed at five, was increased to six on the petition of the abbot.

In Fosbrooke's History of Gloucester are printed, from Harleian MS. No. 913, some scandalous verses concerning an abbot of St. Peter's, probably Henry Foliot (A.D. 1228-1243): they are amusing, and are worth reproducing here, though I am not inclined to rate their historical value at any very high standard. They arose, as it seems, out of some alleged irregularities in the monastery which were brought under the notice of the bishop of Worcester at one of his visitations. He visited St. Peter's in 1239, and again in 1242, when, after a particular examination, the prior and others were removed. The verses are as follows:—

“ Quondam fuit factus festus,
“ Et vocatus ad commestus,
“ Abbas prior de Glowcestrus,
“ Cum tota familia.

“ Abbas ire sede sursum,
“ Et prioris juxta ipsum,
“ Ego semper stavi dorsum,

 “ Et sic pardonem consequeris,
 “ In nostra capitula.
 “ Tunc proinde tu cavebis,
 “ Malum loqui sic tacebis,
 “ Prælatores non spernebis,
 “ Contra tuum regula.”

In Malverne's Register are entered the Statutes of the general chapter of the Benedictine order held at Coventry in the year 1516, and though it does not appear on what particular occasion these statutes were passed, yet as they still further illustrate the interior life of the house, a summary of their provisions is here given. The original version is printed in the Appendix.

First, the brethren, both seniors and juniors, who were present at compline, were not, after they had retired to the dormitory, to come down again to gossip and drink.

No monk, unless by the previous consent of the subprior, was to introduce any []¹ into the infirmary, or any places contained in it, and none of the brethren were to presume in any way to use immoderate drinking there.

No brother, on a day when he had dined and supped in the refectory, was to presume to eat meat elsewhere, unless in the presence of his officer, by his direction and special license.

No monk, having a double pittance of food, was allowed to sell or give away the whole or any part of it without the subprior's license.

At dinner or supper time, at the table of the brethren, whether in the misericord,² or in the places appointed in to be a hall in which were tables and a dresser; a place distinct from the refectory.

the monastery for refreshment, there was always to be reading, which was to be listened to with strict attention, and conversation there was to be held in a low voice, or entirely in Latin.

No one was to take refreshment out of the refectory on fish days, except those to whom the officers had, on account of their infirmity, or any reasonable cause given dispensation.

The monks were to abstain entirely from hunting and hawking, according to the council held by Clement V., and they were not to keep sporting dogs, or birds of prey within the precincts of the monastery; but they were to restrain themselves honestly and religiously in their recreations, wholly avoiding any scandal to religion.

And as it becomes professors of the same religion to be uniform and of one habit, it was directed that no monks of this chapter should use finer or more ornate dresses, but only tunics, amysses,¹ sleeves, and black pilches, "as our fathers of old had decreed."

Moreover, it was ordained that the twenty-third chapter of the constitutions of Benedict XII., entitled "Concerning leave of absence from the house," should be ¹ Amyss (Almutium); a large fur cape, entirely overspreading the shoulders and breast, reaching down as far as the elbows, and having a large roomy hood hanging down from all around the neck. It is not to be confounded with the amice or the fine linen vestment worn by priests on the shoulders and under the chasuble. The amyss formerly worn by rectors was made usually of the skin of the grey squirrel, the "amice gray," as Milton incorrectly spells it.

"Thus passed the night so foul,
"till morning fair

"Came forth, with pilgrim steps,
"in amice gray;
"Who with her radiant finger
"still'd the roar
"Of thunder, chas'd the clouds,
"and laid the winds."

Paradise Regained, Book 4.

more diligently and strictly observed ; and every abbot present at the chapter, and the proctors of those absent, were upon their return to the monastery to cause these statutes to be transcribed, and read before the whole convent.

In the year 1516 abbot Malvern founded a fraternity in St. Peter's, in honour of the Holy Cross, for thirteen poor men to be called Peter's Men, and he also issued certain ordinances for their government, describing their duties in detail. These ordinances are entered in Malvern's Register in English as well as in Latin, and as they contain interesting particulars concerning the monastery at a late period of its career, I print them here verbatim.

From the Quo Warranto and Assize Rolls I have collected a few particulars relative to St. Peter's which may not be uninteresting.

In the fifty-fourth year of Henry III. Robert Syde of Eastleach killed with a stone at Eastleach Henry Fitz John, a servant of the abbot of Gloucester.¹

By an inquisition taken at Gloucester in the second year of Edward I. it was found that Giles de Berkeley had about the festival of the Ascension last past placed a chest containing seventy pounds and certain charters underneath St. Paul's altar in the monastery, leaving it in charge of one of the monks, but shortly afterwards it was found broken open, and the money stolen. It was also found that John Fitz Roger le Bedel of Yarkel, one of the monastery servants, Henry de Kerewent, and John, his brother, were the guilty parties, having committed the theft while the monks were either at dinner or supper; but they made good their flight, and nothing more was heard of them.²

In the eighth year of Edward I. Richard Marshal of Clifford killed with a knife, at Clifford, Walter, a servant of the abbot of Gloucester.³

In the tenth year of Edward I. Walter Alfrege, a mower of the abbot of Gloucester, killed with a hatchet, at Aldsworth, one of his fellow servants, William Cleura, a shepherd.⁴

On Saturday, the feast of S. Clement, 33 Edward III., it happened that a certain John Penzard was found killed in the "ostulrie" of the abbey, in a chamber there called Penzarduschaumbre. Thereupon an inquisition was taken before the coroner on the Monday following, and it was found that on the Thursday next before the feast of S. Luke, in the same year, a certain

William Sely met the deceased at Barnwood, near Gloucester, and a contention having arisen between them, Sely feloniously struck the deceased with a sword on the right side of the head, and then fled; and that the deceased lingered from that time until the Saturday following, when he died. The malefactor could not be found, and the sword was valued at sixpence, which was charged upon the vill of Barnwood.¹

The next and last judicial proceeding to be noticed is interesting as concerning the privileges of an officer of the monastery called the "serjeant monk collector of the rents." The following is a copy:—

There now remain for consideration many charters and documents in the Gloucester cartulary, illustrative, more or less, of the social condition of mediæval times ; but it would be impossible to treat of them seriatim. I propose, therefore, to adopt a classification of the subjects to which they relate, whereby all the salient points of interest will be readily placed before the reader. The following plan will be observed :—

1. Agriculture, and management of manors.
2. Tenures, rents, and services.
3. Divine service, and matters connected therewith.
4. Bells.
5. Wills.
6. Architecture.

1. Agriculture, and management of manors.

As agriculturists and judicious managers of property the monks of a Benedictine house had no equals. They were businesslike, exact, and prompt in their dealings. They required from their tenants and servants a just and faithful performance of their different services and tasks ; but while they did so they were not hard or ungrateful masters. The constitutions and regulations contained in the Gloucester cartulary with regard to the management of their manors are remarkable for the minuteness with which the details of work are considered, and when viewed by persons of a candid and unbiassed mind they must furnish something of an answer to the charges of careless living, wasting of revenues, and general profligacy which are so broadly and so recklessly brought against the monasteries. They are, as I firmly believe, the production, not of a parcel of drunken and besotted monks, but of intelligent landlords and agriculturists, who had a due care for the stewardship of the things committed to their charge. Agriculture was one of the leading features of the Benedictine order, and in this art the monks achieved a great success.

The following is a summary of the Gloucester regulations contained in vol. 3, pp. 105 and 213. Their date is unknown.

No money belonging to the commune was to be paid anywhere else but at the exchequer, and this in the presence of the bursars or receivers; nor was any money received from them to be spent, except by their hands. And if any one, whether steward or other officer of the monastery, received money for the use of the house by order of the abbot or cellarer, he was to go to the exchequer as soon as he returned home, to account for his receipts and expenses before the receivers.

The receivers were, oftener than they had been accustomed, to view the state of the receipts and expenses, that they might learn the arrears of rents, fines, amercements, pensions, and other things, whereupon they were to write to the bailiffs to send home such arrears. Concerning the arrears of pensions the receivers were to request the abbot to procure them to be paid and accounted for.

The receivers were not to pay money to creditors having tallies against the cellarer, sub-cellarer, or kitchenier, unless they held counter tallies, and were certain that such tallies were good, and this in the presence of the cellarer, sub-cellarer, or kitchenier.

Nothing was to be paid in respect of the kitchen unless the kitchenier showed a tally written with his own hand, or admitted his liability by word of mouth.

Transcripts of obligations, of acquittances of money, and other things, and of charters for term of life were to remain with the receivers under lock and key; and the obligations, acquittances, and charters themselves were to be replaced in the treasury in a particular pouch, and a memorandum made at the exchequer in which pouch they were placed, and numbered.

The sub-cellarer was to see that the bread and malt and corn for the anniversaries of abbots were brought home properly, and received by some trustworthy person, who should strike a tally against the reeves for such things. The sub-cellarer and pantler were not to presume to sell corn or malt on any pretence; nor was corn or malt to be retained by them in any of the manors: but if they could make any spare thereof, it was to be replaced and kept in the great house within the monastery. Nothing was to be taken thence or expended unless with the knowledge of the cellarer. And whatever was sold or reserved in the house, it was always to be done through the medium of the cellarer.

The cellarer and kitchener were to buy cattle, pigs, geese, chickens, and such like necessities without the town of Gloucester by means of faithful bailiffs or servants, according to the different seasons of the year, as necessity should require.

The kitchener was to see that he had in the kitchen the necessary cooks, servants, and lads, faithful, diligent, and careful, and not superfluous in number, who would do all things in the kitchen at his bidding (ad nutum suum) without murmuring or excuse. He was also to see to those whose business it was to prepare good soup to be placed before the brethren, as well in the refectory as in the infirmary; and if any of the cooks were negligent in their duty, or contrary, or rebellious, and did not make amends after correction, they were to be removed.

The purchasers of fowl and fish at Bristol or elsewhere were immediately upon their return home to repair to the exchequer, and render a faithful account of their receipts and expenses (they being sworn to perform their service faithfully); and as often as large purchases were made, whether of cattle or other things, some prudent monk or lay brother was to be sent with the purchaser to testify to the receipts and expenses.

The same purchasers also were, immediately after they had bought any beasts, to place some mark upon them, so that when they came home they might be checked by the cellarer or kitchener; and the purchasers were to render an account at the exchequer of each head of cattle or other beast, and its price; and these beasts were to be delivered by tallies to the kitchener or to the bailiffs of manors for the plough, a memorandum being made at the exchequer: and so it would appear at the end of the year how many beasts the kitchener received from purchases, and how many from the manors. Tallies also were to be struck against the bailiffs concerning the purchase of these beasts, that they might answer upon their account.

The cellarer and sub-cellarer were to inquire diligently if the forester and the hedgers in Wivelrugge conducted themselves faithfully in their work, and the forester was to be frequently examined by the sub-cellarer, because it was alleged that both he and the hedgers committed frauds, as well concerning the thorns as in their work.

The carters of Wivelrugge were also to be frequently examined concerning these things by the sub-cellarer, as well by personal inspection as by inquisition, and the same to be done with regard to the "marinatores."

The cellarer and sub-cellarer were to provide one or two carts, with the requisite horses, for the purpose of carrying bushwood in the summer time from Frocester and Buckholt and elsewhere from the groves, as should be ordained, lest there should be a deficiency in the winter in the monastery, as had theretofore been the case.

The cellarer was to provide from the nearest manors, every week, trusses of litter to be placed under the horses in the stables, when necessary, so that there should not be such a waste of hay as formerly.

The sub-cellarer was more frequently than he had been accustomed to visit and examine the millers in the great house, the brewers in the brewery, and the bakers in the bakery, to see whether they were faithful and skilful and sufficient in their work. And he was to warn the brewer not in any way to use bad or useless malt for the convent beer, on pain of dismissal. But if by chance any bailiff sent bad malt to the brewery, the brewer was to retain it, and to purchase a corresponding quantity of good malt in the town, making a tally thereof. And the bailiff who sent the bad malt was, by way of punishment, to pay out of his own pocket for the good malt which the brewer was forced to buy. And the sub-cellarer was, as far as possible, to see that the monastery was always supplied with clear strained beer.

When the cellarer went from the monastery to visit any manor, he was to inquire whether the bailiff was discreet and diligent, and careful about the wain-house, and whether proper reverence and respect were paid him by the servants and workmen; also whether the reeve, keeper of the grange, or reaper managed their offices to the advantage of the monastery, concerning which they were to be examined by virtue of process or attachment.

The cellarer was on every visit to a manor to reduce to writing, before he left, a state of its receipts and expenses, and when he left he was to enjoin the reeve and the keeper of the grange that every month, at the least, and oftener if possible, they should account for their receipts and expenses before the bailiff of the manor, and commit them to writing, that the cellarer at his coming might be certified thereof.

Bailiffs of manors were not to have as many lads as formerly, nor were they to have foals, sheep, oxen, or pigs, or any other beast in any of the manors belonging to the monastery, at the monastery's expense, without the special licence of the abbot or cellarer.

We then have a still more interesting code of rules concerning the management of manors, entitled "Scriptum quoddam super dispositione domus et familiæ." The following is a summary:—

The reeve was once every month, at the least, to cause

these articles to be recited openly before him and his companion the reaper ; and he was to observe to the best of his power, with diligence and care, on pain of restitution, the precepts contained therein, unless excused by some manifest or urgent or reasonable cause, to be shown before his superior when required.

Firstly, one month before Michaelmas all the bondmen of the different manors were to be summoned to that manor where they were born, and there before the "loci serviens" it was to be ascertained who were fit to be retained in the lord's service, and in what service, and where, and at what wages ; it being understood that whenever the bailiff of the place chose they were to be removed from one place to another at the lord's convenience, saving to them their former wages. No one was to be admitted to the lord's service without finding good pledges for his faithful service and for the performance of neglected duties.

The servants were to take charge of the horses, and to perform such other offices as should be assigned them, on festival and ferial days ; nor were they to absent themselves from the court without special licence.

No servants in any way related to the "serviens," reeve, bedel, or other superior were to serve under them, but, if found fitting, they were to be sent to some other place in the lord's service.

The servants at the proper hour of the day, according to the season, were to be at their ploughs, and to plough without injuring or distressing the beasts ; nor were they to employ substitutes at this work without the special leave of the "serviens" or reeve, and this leave was not to be given without manifest cause.

No iron or nails were to be delivered out to the carters unless they previously returned the old iron, or gave a reasonable excuse for not so doing. The ploughmen also were not to have any iron delivered out to them for the ploughs before the reeve had ascertained, by his own personal inspection, for what it was required, and the necessary quantity.

Also no dairywoman,¹ taking her full wages or allowance, was to carry on her own work within the lord's court, but having dispatched the affairs relating to her office, she was to apply herself to other work in the court.

Also no servant to be in the court without some special work being assigned to him, and if that should not be sufficient to occupy his time, then other work to be added.

Also one servant, of tried fidelity and care was to sleep in the hall of the court every night, and at the end of every day's work he was to close the outer door and keep the key in his own custody, so that he might reopen it the first thing on the following morning. He was also to swear that he would not let any one in or out without good and approved cause.

Also there were to be within each ox-stall "cordellæ" of equal length, containing sufficient hay for each team of oxen or horses every night.

No useless or unprofitable beasts were to be kept throughout the winter to the waste of hay and fodder.

No sale of corn to be made without special direction.

No steward to ride any bullock belonging to the court at any time, or to lend him for riding, unless for good and reasonable cause.

Also no new buildings or other works to be commenced, nor any servant to be engaged, or horse put in the stable, without permission.

¹ Daya, a daywoman or dairy-maid, from daierna, a dairy. See note to Hale's Worcester Priory, p. xcvi.

"For she was as it were a manner dey."—Chaucer, The Nounes Preestes Tale, v. 14,851.

"For this damsel, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day-woman."—Shakspeare, Love's Labour's Lost, Act 1, Sc. 2. In a Statute of Richard the Second regulating wages there is mentioned "a swine-herd, a female labourer, and deye."

Salt and flour were to be distributed to the servants in proper quantities, and also to the dairywoman, who should be sworn to keep it safely, and to distribute it properly.

No money, or anything else belonging to the manor, to be delivered to any one but the steward, or to be received by any other person, he having the entire charge of the receipts and expenses.

Also every fortnight, at the least, the steward was to inquire of the dairywoman concerning the fowls, eggs, and chickens, and the geese and ducks under her care.

The steward in all his account to have due regard to economy.

All the workmen to come early to work with proper tools, and to perform their labour faithfully, and to go away at the accustomed and stated hours; and none to be allowed to work who were under age or not of sufficient strength

Every steward winnowing corn was to measure it with the same bushel as was used in the market.

All calves, young pigs, lambs, and colts to be marked.

The accounts of the various stewards to be on rolls of parchment with proper titles.

Then follow certain other injunctions, to which the stewards were not sworn; they apply principally to agricultural affairs, and their provisions are very numerous and minute. According to them boundaries were not to be altered without reasonable cause; the demesne lands were to be properly ploughed, and sown with the choicest seed; no exchanges of lands were to be made; waste and uncultivated places were to be reclaimed; the stubble in the fields was to be collected for thatching roofs and for the oven; the ground, after sheep had been penned there or dung had been strewed, was to be turned over once, and the dung dug in, so that it might not be washed away by the rain; together with many other regulations which will be found interesting.

2. Tenures, rents, and services.

In the manor of Littleton a virgate of land held in villenage was let to farm for five shillings a year, and besides this the tenant was to plough for the lord twice in the year (value 4*d.*). He was on those days to eat at the lord's table, and to give five bushels and a quarter of barley for chirsæc (value 3*s.* 3*d.*). He was to harrow the lord's land at Lent until it was entirely sown (value 4½*d.*); to hoe the lord's corn for three days (value 2½*d.*); to carry the lord's hay (value 2*d.*), to plant beans for one day (value ½*d.*); to wash and shear the lord's wethers (value ½*d.*); to make a stack of hay¹ in the court (value ½*d.*); to perform summage at Andover and Lutegareshale (value 3*d.* per annum); to mow two acres and a half every week during the autumn (value in the whole 3*s.* 2½*d.*); to perform three bederipes in the autumn with two men subsisting at the lord's table (value 3*d.*, such subsistence being deducted); to carry the lord's corn in the autumn (value 4*s.*); and if he did not reap or carry, then to thrash the lord's corn to the same value; to gather nuts for half a day (value ⅓*d.*): thus making the value of these services beyond the farm of five shillings, 12*s.* 2½*d.*

The tenant of a half virgate of the same land was to plough for the lord twice in the year (value 2*d.*); he was also on those days to eat with the lord, and to give chirsæc according to his portion (value 19*d.*); to harrow (value 4½*d.*); to hoe (value 2½*d.*); to perform operations relating to hay as if he held an entire virgate (value 2*d.*); to plant beans (value ½*d.*); to wash and shear the lord's sheep (value ½*d.*); to make a stack (value ½*d.*); to perform summage (value 1½*d.*); to mow, as for one virgate (value 3*s.* 2½*d.*); to perform three bederipes (value 3*d.*); to eat with the lord on those days, and to carry his corn in the autumn (value of such carriage 4*s.*), or to thrash to the same value; to collect nuts (value $\frac{1}{2}d.$): sum total of the work, 10s. 3d.

In the manor of Linkenholt the tenant of a virgate in villenage was subject to perform the following services: to plough twice in the year for the lord, and on such occasions to eat at his table (value of the ploughing 4d.); to harrow the lord's land between Christmas and the Purification (value $4\frac{1}{2}d.$); to hoe the lord's corn for three days (value $1\frac{1}{2}d.$); to give one penny towards mowing the lord's meadow, and to be at the carrying whenever it took place (value 6d.); to plant beans for a day (value $\frac{1}{2}d.$); to clear out the forage from the different houses of the lord's court for a day (value $\frac{1}{2}d.$); to wash and shear the lord's sheep for two days (value 4d.); to perform summage thrice in the year (value 3d.); to mow every week in the autumn (value 3s. $2\frac{1}{2}d.$); to perform two bederipes with one man; and to eat with the lord (value 2d.); to carry the lord's corn in the autumn (value 2s. 8d.); and to have one sheaf the day he ploughed: sum total of the work, 8s. $1\frac{1}{2}d.$

In the manor of Bulley the holder of a messuage with a curtilage and three acres of land paid 3s. 6d. a year; and he was to perform three bederipes in the autumn with one man, namely two bederipes at his own cost (value 3d.), and the third, the lord providing food (value beyond such food 1d.); to give one fowl at Christmas (value 1d.); to collect and carry the lord's hay for one day (value $\frac{1}{2}d.$); and on his death his best beast to be given to the lord as a heriot: sum total of the rent with customs, 3s. $11\frac{1}{2}d.$

In the manors of Clifford, Bocland, Guting, and Hynetone the holder of a messuage with a curtilage and two acres of land paid three shillings a year, and was to give aid according to the number of beasts; to give pannage, namely for a pig more than one year old one penny, and for a younger pig one halfpenny until he was able to be separated; and if he brewed for sale, then to give twelve gallons of beer as toll, or its value; to redeem his son and daughter; not to sell horses or oxen without licence; and on his death the lord to have his best beast as a heriot.

Richard de Porta, who held a virgate of land and half an acre of meadow (the virgate consisting of 36 acres), was subject to perform these services; to plough half an acre in winter, and half an acre in Lent, and to harrow the same at seed-time (value 4*d.*); to perform manual labour with one man for four days every week from Michaelmas to the feast of S. Peter ad Vincula (value of each day $\frac{1}{2}$ d.); to perform summage at Gloucester twice a year (value 8*d.*); also on the fifth or sixth day each week, according to the lord's will, to perform summage at Hinetone or Boclande (value of each day $1\frac{1}{2}$ d.); to wash and shear the lord's sheep for two days (value 1*d.*); to mow the lord's meadow for four days (value of each day, beyond the work due, 1*d.*); to collect and carry the lord's hay for three days and longer, if necessary (value of each day $\frac{1}{2}$ d., the work not being allowed); to carry the lord's hay for one day (value 2*d.* beyond the manual work of that day, which is extended at $\frac{1}{2}$ d.); to carry bushwood wherever the lord wished, the work of one day being allowed; to perform two bederipes before S. Peter ad Vincula with two men (value 3*d.*); and from the feast of S. Peter ad Vincula to Michaelmas to work with one man for five days every week in the lord's harvest (value of each day $1\frac{1}{2}$ d.); to perform eight bederipes with two men (value 2*s.*); to carry the lord's corn twice a week for four weeks (value of each day, beyond the manual work, $1\frac{1}{2}$ d.); to carry mows of corn to the lord's grange for one day (value $\frac{1}{2}$ d.); to give aid according to the quantity of land and the number of beasts; and if he brewed for sale, to give twelve gallons of beer for toll, or its value; to give pannage, namely for a pig more than one year old one penny, and for a younger pig one halfpenny, until he was able to be separated; not to sell horses or oxen without licence; to redeem his son and daughter; and on his death the lord to have his best beast as a heriot: value of the works in the autumn, 8s. 0½*d.*

This service gives us an interesting view of the agricultural labours performed by the different tenants during one year, which, for this purpose, is divided into two unequal portions, the first beginning on Michaelmas Day (September 29), and ending on the feast of S. Peter ad Vincula (August 1), during which period sheep-shearing and haymaking are prominent, the second running from August 1 to September 29, when all the operations of harvesting and brewing are performed.

Certain tenants of the manors belonging to St. Peter's were at one time subject to perform this service; namely, when any monk rode anywhere on the business of the church the tenant was to find a squire with a proper horse to follow him throughout England, and to serve him from the time of his departure from the monastery until his return, and to carry upon his own horse the furniture of such monk's bed, also a book, cresset, candles, two loaves, and half a sextary of wine or beer; and they were to be ready to perform this for half a year, as often as they were summoned; and when the squire tarried within the monastery on account of such service he was to receive every day two squire's loaves with beer and one dish from the kitchen. If his horse died in the service ten shillings were to be allowed by the monastery. At various times this service was by mutual agreement between the abbot and the tenants commuted for others; thus it fell to the lot of William de Ocholte, a tenant in Upton, to attend every year in the monastery on the festival day of SS. Peter and Paul, and after dinner before the washing of hands to cover the table with white towels in the presence of the abbot, and after washing then to remove the same. Another tenant commuted his service for that of pouring out the water for the abbot to wash his hands in the great hall ; another was to bring the knife to table with which the abbot's food was cut, and another tenant was to hold the towel which he received from the steward while the abbot washed his hands.¹

In the manor of Hartpury a very curious rent was reserved. Walter Fremon held there six acres of land with a messuage, and rendered annually on the feast of SS. Peter and Paul one sheep of the value of twelve pence or more, with twelve pence tied round its neck.²

The tenants of the manors belonging to St. Peter' may be thus enumerated :—

1. Liberi tenentes.
2. Consuetudinarii.
3. Lundinarii.
4. Tenentes Honilond.
5. Ferendelli.
6. Tenentes Penilond advitam et ad voluntatem domini.
7. Med'.
8. Cotlandarii, cotarii, coterelli.
9. Tenentes Forlonde.
10. Akermanni.

1. Liberi tenentes are freeholders, those who hold by a free service as opposed to a base or uncertain service.

2. Consuetudinarii are customary tenants, or those who hold lands according to certain customs.

3. Lundinarii are those tenants who perform certain services on the Monday, and are so named from the French word Lundi. They may in fact be termed Monday men. In the extent of Linkenholt³ William Newemon is returned as the holder of a lundinar of land, and among his services he was bound to mow "quolibet die

"Lunæ in autumnno" for the lord. In a lease granted by abbot Malverne, February 1, 10th Henry VIII., of lands in Barnwood,¹ the demised premises are thus described:—"Tres acras terræ arrabilis de dominicali manerii eorum barton Wotton, vocatas Wantesfurlong, jacentes in campo vocato Chamwelfild, et unam acram prati de dominicalibus prædictis jacentem in Drimede, cum dimidia acra terræ jacente in Pedmershild, quatuor mesuagia, tres farendellas terræ, duo crofta, cum duabus lundinariis terræ, vocata Mundais land de customariis terris manerii prædicti; quas tres acras terræ, et cætera præmissa dictus Johannes Robertes (the lessee) nuper habuit et tenuit per copiam curiæ, secundum consuetudinem manerii prædicti." I have extracted this at length, not only because it still further illustrates the meaning of lundinar or Monday's land, but because it shows that the lundinars were part of the customary land of the manor and not of the demesne, though they were both held by copy of court roll. We are, however, still in ignorance of the extent of a lundinar as a measure of land.

4. Tenentes Honilond are those tenants who render a certain quantity of honey yearly for their holdings.

5. Ferendelli are the holders of a fardel of land. Spelman says, upon the authority of an old MS., that a fardel of land is the quarter of a virgate. Ten acres of land make a fardel, and four fardels make a virgate, and four virgates make a hide, and four hides make one knight's fee. Or the fardel may be the fourth part of an acre; but this it is apprehended makes the quantity too small, for in the Domesday Survey of Somersetshire we find this return "Huic manerio pertinent consuetudines istæ de ferdingel xxx. den, &c.," and it is obvious that a quarter of an acre would never have yielded so large a return as thirty pence. Noy, in his Compleat Lawyer

(p. 57), says that the fardel is an eighth part only of a virgate; according to him two fardels of land make a nook, and four nooks a yardland or virgate. The term is used as late as the reign of Henry VIII. In Atkyns's Gloucestershire, second edition, p. 310, it is stated that Edward Lord Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, was seised of the manor of Olviston, and by his attainder it came to the crown, whereupon the manor (except a messuage called a farndel of land, and the passage called Framilody, and excepting all woods) was granted to Thomas Heneage and Catherine his wife, 23rd Henry VIII. In Hale's Register of Worcester Priory, p. 62 a, this measure is mentioned frequently, and on p. 62 b we have this passage, "Quælibet virgata tenet iij^{es}. feorthendeles de "bruera, et dimidia virgata j. feorthendell et dimid'." We have in the Gloucester cartulary materials for determining the extent of the fardel, so far at least as concerns one manor, that of Frocester; there the virgate contains 48 acres, and the fardel 12 acres.¹ As the virgate varies, so does the fardel also.

6. Tenentes Penilond ad vitam et ad voluntatem domini.—These are most probably tenants who pay their rent in money. The term is used as late as the reign of queen Elizabeth. In a chancery suit brought by William Hamond and others, copyholders of the manor of Sherborne in Yorkshire, against William Hungate, lord of the manor, for relief against excessive fines upon deaths and alienations, and to establish ancient manorial custom, it is stated that part of the manor had been from time immemorial called Pennyland and Oxgangland.²

7. Med'.—I know neither the extension nor the meaning of this word.

8. Cotlandarii, cotarii, and coterelli, so named from holding cotlands or cottages with land attached, are said to be servile tenants, and according to Spelman are identical; but this is not quite correct. The cotarius had a free socage tenure, and paid a stated farm or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional customary services; whereas the coterellus seems to have held in mere villenage, and his person, issue, and goods were disposable at the pleasure of the lord. See Hale's Register of Worcester Priory, p. xlv., respecting this distinction, and also p. lvii., where are mentioned cotarii belonging to the liberi and dwelling on their lands.

² Chancery Proceedings, Elizabeth, S. s. 1, n^o 60.

9. Tenentes Forlonde are most probably tenants of the "Utland" of the manor. The Forland and the Inland of a manor would seem to bear the same relation to each other as the boscus forinsecus and boscus intrinsecus. The Inland and Utland are described by Lambarde as the demesne of the lord, and the land of the tenants (Hale's Domesday of St. Paul's, p. lxxii.) See also the Register of Worcester Priory, p. xlv.

10. Akermanni, or akermen, are mentioned in the Gloucester cartulary; but there is no means of ascertaining the quality of their tenure. They occur also in the St. Paul's Domesday and Worcester Priory Register, and the learned editor of those volumes seems to think that they are on the same level as to service with the cotarii. Wright in his Provincial Dictionary says that an akerman is a husbandman, but this definition is far too vague.

A few words here with regard to the measures of land made use of in the Gloucester cartulary will not be out of place. I am not going to define, or to attempt to define, in an elaborate manner the extent of the hide, the carucate, the virgate, the quarentena, or such like, for the simple reason that they are not fixed measures. They vary not only from one county to another, but also in the same county; and, moreover, they frequently vary in different parishes and manors, and sometimes in the same manor, so uncertain was the area which they comprized. We can only deal with them according to the documentary evidence before us ; if an extent or survey of any particular manor do not tell us how many acres the virgate contains, we have no right to lay down any fanciful rules, even from the manor immediately adjacent. Such a proceeding is both rash and unjustifiable, and it is a rock upon which some of the commentators on Domesday have hopelessly wrecked their little bark. Those who are interested in the ancient measures of land used in England will find some very useful and pertinent remarks on the subject in the Domesday of Northamptonshire, extended and translated by Mr. Stuart A. Moore, a book which reflects great credit on its editor for having so carefully investigated this important question.

The several virgates mentioned in the cartulary before us are found to differ considerably ; thus in the extent of the manors of Clifford, Boclande, Gutinge, and Hyne-tone¹ the virgate is sometimes 48 acres, sometimes 40, sometimes 38, sometimes 36, and sometimes 28. In the manor of Hynetone four virgates are said to make one hide, each virgate containing 40 acres. And so throughout the book all these measures will be found to vary.

3. Divine service, and matters connected therewith.

Abbot Gamages gave to the high altar of the monastery a large gilt chalice ; also an ivory image of the Blessed Virgin, and a glass vessel with a silver foot for holding relics ; also a precious "culcitra ;" also three embroidered vestments, with as many chasubles ; also a cope of baudkin, and an embroidered cope. Edward III. gave to St. Peter's, as a thank offering for delivery from shipwreck, a ship² of gold. Edward the Black

Prince gave a gold cross of great value, containing a piece of the true cross; and a necklace with a ruby was given by the Queen of Scotland. Queen Philippa also gave a heart and ear of gold. Abbot Horton gave four silver basons for the use of the high altar, namely, two large ones for the abbot, and two small ones for the priest celebrating there; also two silver candlesticks for the same altar, and a gold chalice; also a silver vessel for the holy water, with a silver sprinkler; also a silver cross gilt, to place on the altar while the abbot celebrated; also a silver pastoral staff. Two sets of vestments of red and white cloth worked with gold were also purchased during Horton's abbacy. His anniversary was directed to be solemnly commemorated year by year with the office for the dead, as was usual for abbots, and the mass for him was to be celebrated in the vestments of red velvet worked with gold moons and stars which he had himself provided, and the "tabula desuper altare," (the reredos) with the images which he had caused to be constructed were to be covered up.

4. Bells.

The following document relative to the placing of chimes in the tower of the monastery is interesting. It is taken from Malverne's Register:—

The two hymn-tunes specified in this contract were most probably used as morning and evening chimes; the Christe Redemptor in the morning, and the Chorus Novæ Jerusalem in the evening. To those ecclesiastical musicians who have happily succeeded in restoring the hymnody of the Church of England to its ancient grandeur and simplicity these tunes will be no strangers.
 They will be found both in ancient and modern musical notation in Helmore's "Hymnal noted."

5. Wills.

The following extract from a letter of Gilbert Foliot, abbot of Gloucester, to Robert, bishop of Hereford, gives us an outline of the will of Gunni de Stantuna, a benefactor to the church of Hereford, as well as that of Gloucester: "Notum præterea sanctitati vestræ facimus, quia clericus vester Gunni de Stantuna, in novissimis agens, a vobis, ut patre et pastore animæ suæ, sanctarum orationum vestrarum suffragium expetit, ut vestro interventu communitus, jamjam exiturus, Domini misericordiam possit securius expectare. 6. Architecture.

The short chronicle printed in Vol. I. gives us many illustrations of the architectural history of the abbey, and from it we learn the exact period at which the principal parts of the building were called into existence.

It is not one of the least interesting features of this history that the old abbey church, now the cathedral of the see of Gloucester, still remains in its integrity, with cloister and chapter-house, to testify to the zeal, the piety, and the skill of the monks, who though now lying dead, but not forgotten, in the abbey churchyard, yet live in their work, in this case literally the work of their own hands, the noble and splendid edifice in which all the glories of Gothic architecture are crowded together in one magnificent triumph of the builders' art. May it be that these workers in stone, who reared and who worshipped in this material edifice, are now dwelling in the brightness of celestial bliss, in a tabernacle not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, a house which shall endure for ever.

In the year 1860, when the Archæological Institute visited Gloucester, the cathedral was carefully examined and described by Professor Willis, and I cannot do better than refer my readers to the report of the learned Professor's remarks printed in the "Gentleman's Magazine" for September 1860 (page 270). The building combines beautiful examples of Norman, Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular work, and the general character which it presents is that of a Norman cathedral complete nearly from one end to the other, but subjected to various alterations in consequence of repairs and faults of construction. Two or three points of special architectural interest may be noticed here, of which perhaps the most striking is the statement that the vault of the nave was completed by the monks themselves, or as the chronicle says in simple words, "Et anno Domini millesimo ducentesimo quadragesimo secundo completa est nova volta in navi ecclesiæ, non auxilio fabrorum ut primo, sed animosa virtute monachorum item in ipso loco existentium."¹

The Perpendicular style is supposed by Professor Willis to have received its first development in our abbey church. The earliest specimen in which the style is complete is the great west window of Winchester, built in 1350 or 1360. But at Gloucester we have a Perpendicular design essentially the same, but of an earlier date. It is in the south transept, which we are told by our chronicle was recased during the abbacy of Wigmore (A.D. 1329-1337). This recasing or pannelling has much of Perpendicular character, but it is wanting in one chief characteristic of that style, inasmuch as the mullions are not carried straight up to the head of the arch, but branch off into arches before reaching it. Although the style is not fully developed, yet the change from Decorated is most conspicuous ; it is undoubtedly the stepping-stone to that complete development which is shown in other parts of the building. To use Professor Willis's own words, "It must have begun somewhere ; " in some place the mullion must have been carried up " for the first time ; and he knew no place so likely as " Gloucester to have produced the change of style."

Finally, the cloisters, which may justly be styled one of the wonders of this country, present to us an exquisite example of fan-vaulting, an architectural feature peculiar to England, and of which England may well be proud. These cloisters were commenced in the time of abbot Horton, and carried on to the door of the chapter-house ; but the work was taken up and completed by abbot Frocester.

The building has recently undergone considerable repair and restoration, which have been carried out well and discreetly, and St. Andrew's chapel is now being decorated by the skilful hand of Mr. Gambier Parry in such a way as to leave nothing to be desired. Let us hope that the gorgeous ornamentation which is thus introduced may not stop at St. Andrew's chapel, but be extended to other parts of the cathedral, and particularly to the choir and the sanctuary ; and not to pause here, let us hope that when the outer case as it were has received its adornments, there may be restored that which the building can then fitly enshrine, namely, the magnificent and expressive ritual which our mother the Church of England has for her undoubted heritage, a ritual which is from Heaven because it speaks, feebly it may be, but none the less truly, of that Golden City, the Holy Jerusalem, bright as a jasper stone, clear as crystal, where there is no night, because the throne of God rests there for ever and ever.

Et Johannes bene cognovit⁶ prædictam cartam et quicquid in ea⁷ continetur, sed dicit quod per factum illud ab actione repelli non debet, quia dicit quod quaecunque factum proferat sub nomine prædicti Gilberti, quod idem Gilbertus se de tenementis prædictis nunquam dimisit, nec aliquem statum prædicto Henrico abbati, prædecessori, etc., de tenementis prædictis fecit. Constitutio quedam necessaria super pecunia communæ et aliis rebus.

Nulla pecunia de cætero spectans ad communam alicubi solvatur, si commode fieri potest, nisi ad scaccarium, et hoc in præsentia bursariorum seu receptorum; nec aliqua pecunia recepta ab eisdem expendatur seu solvatur, nisi per manus eorumdem. Et si contigerit quod aliquis denarios receperit ad commodum domus suæ per præceptum abbatis sive celerarii, ut de lana Londoniæ vel de debito aliquo seu alibi de rebus aliis, sive sit senescallus sive alius qualiscumque de nostris, quamcito domi venerit, accedat ad scaccarium de receptis et expensis computaturus coram receptoribus.

Item receptores sæpius solito videant statum receptarum et expensarum, ut sciant et intelligant de summa areragiorum, de redditibus, finibus terrarum, amerciamentis, pensionibus, et rebus aliis, quibus visis statim scribant ballivis pro hujusmodi arreragiis domi mittendis.

De arreragiis vero pensionum sollicitent receptores abbatem ut idem procuret dicta arreragia solvi et sibi numerari.

Item non solvant receptores denarios creditoribus habentibus tallias contra celerarium, subcelerarium, seu coquinarium, nisi contra tallias versus se habentes, et nisi certi fuerint de eisdem talliis quod bonæ sint, et hoc in præsentia celerarii, subcelerarii, seu coquinarii.

Item non solvant pro coquina aliquid, nisi coquinarium talliam ostendat scriptam de manibus suis, vel nisi ejus viva voce confiteatur se teneri alicui sine tallia, et hoc pro quibus rebus et quantum.

Item transcripta obligationum, quietantiæ pecuniarum et rerum aliarum, cartarum ad terminum vitæ concessarum, penes receptores resideant ut tallia coram eis recitata frequenter oblivioni traduntur, et sit hujusmodi scriptura sub eorum custodia serrata. Et ipsæ obligationes, quietantiæ, et cartæ ad terminum vitæ, reponantur in thesauraria in certa capsula; et fiat memorandum ad scaccarium in qua capsula possunt et debeant numerari.

Item subcelerarius¹ videat quod assisa panis, et brasium ad cervisiam et bladum assignatum ad anniversaria abbatum integraliter domi veniat, et per aliquem certum et fidelem recipiatur qui contra præpositos de hujusmodi receptis talliam faciat. Nec subcelerarius nec panetarius bladum vel brasium pro aliquo negotio vendere præsumat, nec bladum nec brasium in maneriis per eosdem retineatur, sed si espernum inde facere poterunt, in magna domo infra monasterium reponatur et custodiatur. Nec extunc aliquid inde sumatur vel expendatur nisi de conscientia celerarii. Expedit enim si quid inde sit vendendum, sive in domo reservandum, quod per celerarium vendatur sive servetur diversis ex causis.

Item celerarius et coquinarius pro viribus emant boves, porcos, aucas, gallinas, pullos, et alia hujusmodi necessaria extra villam Gloucestriciæ per certos et fideles ballivos seu servientes secundum diversitatem temporum anni prout necessitas exposcit pro posse suo.

Item provideat coquinarius quod cocos, servientes, et garchiones in coquina necesarios, fideles, et diligentes, et sollicitos, et non superfluos habeat, qui omnia quæ facienda sunt in coquina ad nutum suum faciant sine murmure vel excusatione. Et maxime de hiis quæ mittuntur in refectorium ut conventus bonum habeat potagium cum omni diligentia præparatum una cum aliis tam in refectorio² quam in³ infirmario coram fratribus apponendum, et si quis ex cocis majoribus vel minoribus consuetudinem allegans in præmissis negligens extiterit, seu contrarius seu rebellis semel et iterum correptus, si non emendaverit, omnino amoveatur.

Item emptores apud Bristolliam seu alibi emptiones de animalibus volatilibus seu piscibus facientes, statim cum redierint, accedant ad scaccarium et ibi fideliter coram receptoribus computum reddant de receptis et expensis, et sint hujusmodi emptores jurati de fideliter serviendo diversis ex causis; et quotiens emptiones magnæ faciendæ sunt, sive de bobus sive de rebus aliis, mittatur aliquis monachus prudens vel frater conversus cum emptore eidem testimonium perhabiturus de receptis et expensis.

Item iidem emptores postquam aliqua animalia emerint plura vel pauciora, statim aliquo notabili signent, et cum domi venerint boves seu animalia alia a celerario, coquinario et receptoribus;¹ et reddant emptores computum ad scaccarium de quolibet capite bovis seu alterius animalis et de ejus pretio, et liberentur hujusmodi animalia per tallias coquinario vel præpositis maneriorum ad carucas, et fiat inde memorandum ad scaccarium, et sic apparebit in fine anni quot animalia coquinarius receperit de emptione, et quot de maneriis.

Fiant etiam talliæ contra præpositos de emptione hujusmodi animalium ut inde respondeant super computum suum.

Celerarius et subcelerarius inquirent² diligenter si forestarius et spinatores in Wivelrugge fideliter se habent in suis operationibus, et forestarius frequenter a subcelerario examinetur, dicitur³ enim a quibusdam quod tam ille quam spinatores fraudem faciunt tam de spinis quam de operationibus operatorum.

Caretarii etiam de Wivelrugge super hujusmodi frequenter examinentur a subcelerario, tam per inspectionem oculorum quam per inquisitionem inde prudenter faciendas. Hoc idem fiat de marinatoribus quia necesse est, ut dicitur.

Item provideant⁴ celerarius et subcelerarius unam vel duas caretas cum equis necessariis ut in æstate possint cariare buscam tam de Froucestria quam de Bochofte et aliunde de gravis prout ordinabitur, ne in hyeme in monasterio sit inde defectus prout hucusque consuevit.

Item provideat celerarius de maneriis propinquioribus singulis septimanis certas trassas literæ mittendas ad stabularium projiciendas sub equis cum opus fuerit, ne fiat de cætero tanta destructio fœni quanta hucusque inde fieri consuevit.

Item subcelerarius frequentius solito visitet et examinet molendinarios in magna domo, braciatores in bracino, pistores in pistrino, ut fideles sint, et quilibet eorum habilis in suo officio, et sufficiens. Et inlubeat braciatori ne aliquo modo

Sed si forte aliquis præpositus malum brasium ad bracinum transmiserit, braciator illud penes se retineat, et tantundem de bono brasio et commendabili in villa emat talliam inde faciens. Et præpositus qui malum misit brasium, in poenam sui delicti bonum brasium emptum¹ a braciatore de bonis suis propriis aquietabit. Et provideat etiam subcelerarius in quantum potest quod conventus jugiter cervisiam habeat defæcatam.

Item cum celerarius egreditur a monasterio divertens ad aliquod manerium, diligenter inquirat et investiget ut ballivus discretus et diligens extiterit, et circa wannagium cum effectu sollicitus, et utrum a famulis et operariis reveretur et timeatur, et si præpositus, grangerius et messerius in suis officiis bene administrent ad commodum domus, et super hoc examinentur tam per dicas quam per scripta seu attachiamenta, et redigat celerarius in scriptis statum manerii quoad recepta et expensas singulis vicibus adventus sui antequam a manerio recedat, et in recessu suo præcipiat præposito et grangerio ut ad minus singulis² mensibus et pluries si fieri possit coram ballivo manerii recepta et expensas recitent, et in scriptis redigi faciant integraliter, ut alias celerarius in adventu suo certificetur.

Item nec permittantur ballivi maneriorum habere tot garciones quot consueverunt habere, nec habeant pullos equorum, oves, boves majores vel minores, seu porcos, vel aliud quodcumque animal in maneriis nostris ad eorum custodiam deputatis ad custum nostrum sine speciali licentia abbatis seu celerarii.

Hoc idem intelligatur de præposito, grangerio, messerio manerii, secundum extentam, et tamen super hoc erunt multum commendandi nisi rationabilem causam ostendant quare hoc facere non possint.

Item provideatur quod assisa ad panem veniat certis diebus ad pistrinum.

Et ipsi capellani ad introitum servitii sui, coram abbate et conventu, sub juramento firmabunt quod nullum aliud servitium ab aliquo suscipient nec facient dum ad illud fuerint assignati, sed tantum pro animabus prædictorum quotidie specialiter celebrabunt et constanter. Et nullo modo procurabimus quod in fraudem conventionis hujus res ista per monachum fiat. Habebunt vero prædicti capellani unum clericum sibi in omnibus intendentem. Et habebunt ipsi capellani ad opus suum et clerici sui pro solidatis annuis duas marcas sterlingorum² et dimidiam percipiendas ad quatuor anni terminos,³ videlicet ad Natale Domini octo solidos et quatuor denarios, ad Annunciationem Beatæ Mariæ octo solidos et quatuor denarios, ad Nativitatem Sancti Johannis Baptistæ octo solidos et quatuor denarios, ad festum Sancti Michaelis octo solidos et quatuor denarios, per manum monachi qui pro tempore fuerit custos prædictæ capellæ Beatæ Mariæ. Oath of William Emley.

Ego, Willielmus Emley, nuper monachus et professus monasterii Sancti Petri Gloucestriae, ordinis Sancti Benedicti, Wigorniensis diocesis, a dicto monasterio discedere proponens, atque ad domum sive prioratum de Burgevenny migrare desiderans, ibique residuum tempus vitae meae expendere et continuare volens, et a venerabili patre Willielmo, permissione divina ejusdem monasterii abbate ad hoc licentiatum, et legitime dimissus, juro ad haec et per haec sacrosancta Dei evangelia, quod nunquam post decessum meum a dicto monasterio, neque per me aut aliquam aliam personam quamcunque ad hoc suspectam, dicam, vel faciam dici, fieri, vel procurari faciam quicquam ad infamiam, praepudicium, aut aliud quodecunque gravamen dicti reverendi patris ejusque monasterii, monachorum, servorumque, ministrorum quorumcunque, dicto monasterio consensum contingere valeat in futuro, et ut hoc juramentum meum ratum sit et stabile, profiteor me id jurare voluntarie, non secrete, non coacte, sed palam et publice, et in præsentia.¹

Statutes passed at a general chapter of the Benedictine Order held at Coventry in the year 1516.

A.D. 1516. In primis statuimus et ordinamus, quod fratres omnes, tam seniores quam juniores, qui completorii intersint officio, amodo et deinceps postquam in dormitorium se receperint, ad fabulas et potationes omnino non descendant.

Præterea statuimus, quod non licet cuiquam monachorum, nisi prius superioris intra monasterium existentis licentia petita et obtenta, aliquam² introducere in infirmitorium, seu in aliqua loca in eodem contenta, nec quod quisquam fratrum aliquas ibidem potationes inordinatas quoquo pacto exercere præsumat.

Præterea statuimus et ordinamus, quod nullus frater, die quo in refectorio se refecerit, prandium et cœnas carnem manducare aliquatenus, nisi in præsentia sui prælati ex ejus præcepto aut licentia speciali, præsumat.

Præterea statuimus et ordinamus, ut cuiquam monachorum non licet victus duplicatam pietantiam habenti cam vel ejusdem aliquam portionem vendere, nec cam libere dare superioris licentia in hoc minime obtenta.

Præterea statuimus et ordinamus, quod in mensa fratrum tempore prandii et cœnæ, sive in misericordia, sive in locis pro misericordia deputatis, sese reficientium, lectio semper habeatur, cui attente auditum præbeant, et quod ibidem aut submissa voce aut omnino Latino loquantur.

Præterea statuimus et ordinamus, quod in diebus piscium nullus extra refectorium se reficiat, illis dumtaxat exceptis cum quibus eorundem prælati propter senium, debilitatem, aut aliquam rationabilem causam, duxerit dispensandis.

Præterea, cum in Vienensi consilio per Clementem quintum sit monachis interdictum, quod venationibus seu aucupationibus aliquatenus indulgeant, non novam constitutionem facientes, sed veterem mentibus hominum firmitus infigentes, volumus et præcipimus quod monachi nostri ordinis et capituli a venationibus et aucupationibus omnino abstineant secundum formam constitutionis prædictæ. Venaticos canes seu aves prædales per se vel per alios intra septa monasterii nec teneant nec foveant, pœnas in dicto consilio, si contrafecerint, attentius formidantes, in suis autem recreationibus honeste et religiose se semper exhibeant, scandalum religionis omnino præcavescentes.

Ejusdem religionis cultores decet unius moris esse pariter et uniformes, propterea statuimus et ordinamus, quod monachi nostri capituli vestimentis cultioribus aut multum nitidis non utantur, sed solum tunicis, almicis, manicis, et pellibus nigris, extrinsecus vestiantur, prout patres nostri antiqui fieri decreverunt.

Præterea sub obtestatione divini judicii præcipimus, ut in singulis nostri ordinis et capituli locis illud Benedicti duodecimi capitulum 23^m, quod intitulatur, "De licentiis eundi extra monasterium," diligentius et strictius observetur, et ut de ignorantia ejusdem nemo se excusatum habeat, a prælatis vel a quibus ipse jusserit dicta constitutio exponatur.

Cum enim frustra sit diffinitiones seu statuta condere et ea minime executioni mandare, irrefragabiliter ordinamus et præcipimus ut singuli patres in hoc capitulo præsentis et absentium procuratores sibi has nostras diffinitiones transcribi, et cum ad monasterium redierint, easdem coram toto fratrum conventu et perlegi faciant et districtius observari.

Letter from the University of Oxford to Abbot Malverne.

Viro præclarissimo domino Willielmo Malverne, abbati monasterii Gloucestris, quam optime merito universus regentium non regentium Oxoniensis academice cætus S. p. d.

Quo magis animis nostris revolvimus, præstantissime pater, quam splendide et honorifice matrem nostram atque tuam adornat probatorum virorum in moribus approbatio; et inter litteratos condigna gradus assumptio; eo magis citamur immo et impulsus trahimur, ut te et tibi non multum impares gratifice adhortemur; et innitemur quatinus academice nostræ (quæ nobis mater est) honori sitis et decus decori accumiletis. Novisti, egregie pater (si legem antiquam ad memoriam revoces), steriles matronas pudibunde fuisse repulsas, et satis cum dedecore fuisse repudiatas. Quoniam inutilis est matrona nullam prolem paritura, et quanto sterilis est despectior, tanto prole plena omnibus est acceptior. Ut matrem igitur tuam fecundiores reddas ad gradum illum qui eam maxime adornat; maturius te attingas quo si te decoraveris: adeo nitidum ac splendidum et nobis et tibi fiet: ut nostræ academice honorem tibi vero dignitatem et tuis omnibus amicis his saltem qui tuæ professionis eximiam gloriam afferes. Nec a gradus susceptione sumptus te detineat, parvi quidem aestimatur pecuniæ effusio; si ad gradus et doctrinæ honorem spectes; hæc ubique gentium te efferet, hanc a te nemo eripiet pecuniæ labiles et caducæ a nonnullis etiam in opprobrio habentur nec si verum profiteamur quisquam est qui earum cumulo non detrahit, et obloquitur. Postremo si huic nostræ intercessionis acquieveris quicquid hac jure tibi præstare possimus quam facillime impetrabis.

Vale. Oxoniæ undecimo calendas Octobris.

ALA. An aisle. I. 44, 46.

ALBA. An alb. I. 40.

ALMICIUM DE GRISEO. A grey amyss. I. 57. See ante, p. lxxv.

ALTELAGIUM, or ALTARAGIUM.

The offerings made upon the altar, and also the profit that arises to the priest by reason of the altar, obventio altaris. I. 302, et passim.

AQUELETIUM. See Ducange sub voce Aqualicium. "Locus, vel "guttatorium, per quod aqua foras "mittitur, et elicitur a proprio "alveo." In the instance before us the word is considered to be synonymous with lavatory. St. Oswald's priory could not obtain a good supply of fresh water; therefore Reginald de Homme, abbot of Gloucester, granted them liberty to draw water from the "aqueletium" or lavatory belonging to St. Peter's as long as the two houses remained upon friendly terms. I. 172.

ARCARIUS or ARCHARIUS. An archer. II. 177, 301.

ASPERSORIUM. A holy water sprinkler. I. 49.

B.

BACO. A bacon hog. I. 309.

BACULUM PASTORALE. A pastoral staff. I. 49, 57.

BALLIA. Delivery; from the French bailler. II. 280.

BAUDEKYN. A rich embroidered silk or cloth. I. 40, 45.

BECHIA. A spade. Beche, French. III. 219.

BEDERIPA. A service which tenants of manors were bound to perform; namely, to reap the lord's corn at harvest. See Spelman. I. 165, et passim.

BENE. Una arura quæ vocatur. III. 162.

BENERTHE, BENHERTHE, BENIHERTHE, PENIHERTHE. A service which the tenants of some manors owed to their lords, consisting in working for them a specified time with their carts and ploughs. It is mentioned by Lambarde as having been paid in the Weald of Kent. "Item, arabit semel in anno " dimidiam acram terræ ex consuetudine quæ vocatur benherthe." III. 71. "Et faciet unam aruram " quæ vocatur beneherthe, ad " unicum pastum domini, et valet " ultra cibum unum denarium." III. 79. "Et faciet unam aruram " quæ vocatur beneherthe ad unicum cibum domini, et valet " ultra cibum unum denarium." III. 80. Vide also pp. 82 and 83. "Et debet unam aruram quæ " vocatur benerthe, et tunc arabit " unam acram, et valet illa dieta " cum hersura sex denarios," III. 123. "Et faciet unam aruram " quæ vocatur peniherthe, et valet " tres denarios quia recipiet de " bursa domini quartum denarium." III. 134.

BLODIUS. There is some doubt whether this means blue or red. The editor of the Evesham Chronicle gives blue as the definition. In Parker's Glossary of Heraldry it is said to be equivalent to "gules;" but gules and blodius are certainly not synonymous. In mediæval inventories blodius generally stands for blue, and I apprehend that it must be so understood in the instance before us. Perhaps in its heraldic signification it stands for the tincture called sanguine.

BONDENELEDRIPIA. How this differs from the ordinary bedripe I cannot explain. It seems to be paid for at the same rate. "Et " faciet unam bederipam quæ " vocatur bondenebedripam cum " quatuor hominibus, et valet sex " denarios," III. 79. "Et faciet " unam bondenebedripe cum duobus hominibus, et valet tres " denarios," III. 80. "Et faciet " unam bondenebedripam cum " uno homine, et valet unum " denarium obolum." III. 84. "Et inveniet unum hominem ad " bondenebedripam proprio custu, " et valet unum denarium obolum." III. 129.

BORDELLUM. A board or table set up in a fair, for which a toll was due to the lord. "Memorandum " de novis bordellis sine licentia " levatis quæ de novo ponuntur " ad annuum redditum." III. 61.

BORECHA. "Concedo etiam monachis et eorum ministris liberam " potestatem trahendi retia, et " jacendi borechas, et piscandi per " totam aquam." I. 260.

BOTÆ. Boots. II. 91.

BRECES. A brece is a half virgate according to the Register of Worcester Priory (p. 87 a). In the examples before us from the Gloucester Cartulary the word does not seem to be expressive of any particular measure of land. It is used as a mere synonym for assart land. At p. 68 of vol. I. it is stated that William the Second gave to St. Peter's "duas " breces" in Celesworthe; and that his brother, king Henry I., confirmed the same gift to St. Peter's by the description of "duas essartas." Again, if we peruse the charters Nos. 149 to 156 (vol. I, p. 238) we shall see the same words used indiscriminately. Breck is an East Country word signifying a piece of unenclosed arable land; a sheep walk, if in grass.—Wright's Provincial Dictionary.

BRESA or BROSIA. "Et ipsi capellani habebunt bresas de pistrino sive de bracino cum necesse fuerit." III. 280.

BROCA. A brook. "Unam acram jacentem juxta Suthbroke aquilonali extendentem in longum inter dictam brocam et terram Johannis episcopi." II. 203.

BROUDATUS. Embroidered. "Item, iii. vestimenta pretiosa et broudاتا." I. 40. "Et aliam pretiosam capam broudата." Ibid.

BULLERIA. A salt pan(?). III. 222, 223.

BURNETUM. Cloth made of dyed wool. "... et Matildæ uxori meæ unam supertunicam de burneto." I. 184.

C.

CAPA or CAPPA. A cope. "Item, pro secundo ferculo xxx. festivitibus caparum per annum iiii. libras." I. 37. "Et in omnibus festis caparum." I.

37. "Item, unam capam pretiosam de baudekyno, et aliam pretiosam capam broudата." I. 40.

"Et aliam sectam de baudekyn pro festo Apostolorum comparavit cum aliis diversis cappis, volueribus intextis, tam de auro quam de nigro." I. 45.

CASULA. A chasuble. "Item, iii. vestimenta pretiosa et broudата, cum totidem casulis et apparatu." I. 40.

CELLA. A cell to a monastery. I. lxxxvii, et passim.

CIRCULATOR. A cooper. I. 186.

CIRPUS, for SCIRPUS. A rush. "Et colliget cirpos ad festum Beati Petri, et valet obolum." III. 118.

CIVERA. "Item, quod sint in curia, bechiæ, howæ, civeræ, et alia minuta utensilia famulis curiæ sufficientia." III. 219.

CLAUSTRALIS. Literally, of or belonging to a cloister. In the example before us it means a cloistered monk. "Statuimus quod cum fratres aliqui mittuntur ad cellas ibidem ad tempus moraturi, hoc fiat de consilio abbatis, prioris, supprioris, tertii prioris, præcentoris, et quinque claustralium seniorum." I. lxxxvii.

CLAUSTRUM. A cloister. I. 55.

CLERIMONIA. The priesthood. "De hiis qui ponunt filios ad clerimoniam sine licentia." III. 222.

COLIBERTUS. A colibert. "Quidam Kylmerus nomine, filius Ulmeri coliberti, pressus opere

" et nomine, dedit pro liberatione
 " sui piscaturam de Fromelode,
 &c." I. 77. Coliberts were tenants in socage, and particularly such villeins as were manumitted or made freemen (Jacob's "Law Dictionary"). The word occurs in Domesday, Somerset: "Episcopus Winton. tenet Fantone, ibi quater xx. villani, et quater xxii. bordarii, et lxx. servi, xvi. coliberti, et xviii. porcarii;" and under Gloucestershire: "Brictric filius Algari tenebat Turnebiri T. R. E. ibi xxiii. bordarii, et xv. servi, et xv. coliberti, ibi ii. molendini," &c. They were a middle sort of tenants, between servile and free, or such as held their freedom of tenure under condition of such works and services. They were sold, given, and exchanged like serfs; instances of which may be adduced from various sources.

The Cartulaire de l'Abbaye de Saint Père de Chartres, published by the French Government in 1840, supplies several examples. By a charter dated about 1080 earl Tedbaldus gives to the abbey certain coliberts, whom he describes as "quosdam servos mei juris, natos ex servis meis ancillisque Sancti Petri Carnontensis, cum uno servo meo libero." By another charter, dated about 1070, other coliberts, with their cousin and his wife and children, were granted to the abbey. About the same time

Hugo, named Brustans Salicem, gave to the abbey a coliberta, together with a fourth part of the church and vill of Guiri, and other property. Between 1089 and 1101 Frederic gives to the abbey his colibert, named Robert, and his sister Eremburg, that they may be coliberts of the abbey. In the year 1061 Hugo grants his colibert, Letaldus, with his wife, his brother, and their children, on condition that they should remain free in the service of the abbey. By another charter (1013-1033) a colibert of the abbey, named Vivian, and his wife, who had killed a serf, were given, together with their money, by the abbey to William, a knight, the serf's lord, in order that their lives might be spared; but their sons were retained to the use of the abbey, while those who should be born afterwards would be serfs, and belong to William.

There is in Histoire des Races Maudites de la France et de l'Espagne, by Francisque Michel, vol. II. p. 1 (1847), an interesting account of the coliberts. The following abstract is given by A. Cheruel in his Dictionnaire Historique des Institutions, Mœurs, et Coutumes de la France (Paris, 1855, vol. I. p. 173):—

"Coliberts. The word colibert has been understood in several ways. In the Middle Ages it denoted a class of serfs, also called cuvets; at present

“ the appellation of collibert is “ given to certain inhabitants of “ Aunis and Bas-Poitou. ‘The “ ‘colliberts,’ says M. Guérard “ (Prolégomènes du Cartulaire
 “ de Saint Pere de Chartres, “ § 32), ‘may be classed either
 “ ‘in the lowest rank of freemen,
 “ ‘or at the head of those bound “ ‘by serfdom.’ Whether their “ name signifies free from the “ yoke, free-necked—according to “ D. Muley’s definition—or to “ denote the freed men of a “ patron, as Ducange has it, it “ is not the less certain that the “ Colliberts were deprived in “ some measure of liberty. The “ son of a Collibert remained a “ Collibert whatever change
 “ might happen to the person, “ tenure, goods, or position of “ his family. Colliberts were “ also sold, given, or exchanged
 “ like serfs. Thibaut, Comte de “ Chartres, made a donation in “ 1080 to the abbey of S. Père
 “ de Chartres of several colliberts, “ with the condition that the “ monks should sing a psalm for “ him every day of the year, ex“ cept feast days. Colliberts
 “ were therefore bound by serf“ dom. Their position appears “ to have borne a great analogy
 “ to that of the ancient coloni.

“ A council of Bourges, held “ in 1031, excluded them from “ the priesthood. Some writers
 “ think that they were strangers,
 “ or the descendants of foreigners,

“ and in this see the reason of “ their inferior condition. Hence
 “ the taxes laid on them, and the “ right of mortmain which affected “ their inheritance. Probably “ the colliberts of our days are
 “ the successors of these oppressed “ classes. The fact is, that in “ the part of Poitou known as “ ‘Le Marais’ there are still “ miserable districts, whose in“ habitants are fishermen, and “ known as colliberts or cagots.”

The following extract from Potgiesser, De Statu Servorum
 (lib. 4, c. 14, p. 781), still further illustrates the subject :—“ De-“ nique notes velim, libertos ali-“ quando collibertorum nomine
 “ signari. Neque tamen idcirco “ necessum videtur, protinus no“ vam speciem effingere, cum “ revera nullum discrimen inter
 “ utrosque adsit, sed genus sint
 “ inter servos et ingenuos fluc“ tuans. Notissimum enim est, “ tametsi res quæpiam diversas “ appellationes sortiatur, non “ tamen novas ideo ejus constitui “ species.”

See also Heywood’s Ranks of the People for a full account of coliberts.

COMPROMISSARIUS. Literally, a compromiser. III. 24. The election of an abbot was sometimes conducted per viam compro- missi, as it was termed; that is to say, instead of every member of the monastery recording his vote separately, three, four, or five of the number were selected as a kind of representative body, and they were empowered to elect whomsoever they pleased as abbot, such election to have as full force as if conducted by the whole body. We have an instance of this on the death of abbot Reginald de Homme, when five "compromissarii" were intrusted with the duty of electing a new abbot, viz., Thomas de Lokinthone, the sacristan, and the priors of the four dependent houses, Bromfield, Ewenny, Kilpeck, and Stanley. The proceedings will be found in vol. III. p. 22, et seq.

CONING'. Rabbit-skin. "Unam supertunicam de burneto cum penula de coning." I. 184.

CORDELLA. "Quod in unaquaque boveria fiant cordellæ æqualis longitudinis, infra quas comprehendendi poterit certa æstimatio fœni." III. 214.

CORNERIUM. A corner. "Sed dicunt quod præfatus Almaricus tenetur solus pontem illum pro terris suis cuilibet cornerio ejusdem pontis contigue adjacentibus reparare." III. 243.

CORREATOR. "Item, quod per correatores et subversatores com-potorum multotiens supprimitur veritas." III. 216.

COSTAMENTUM. Cost or expense. "... equitare debent per totam Angliam ad meum costamentum vel hæredum meorum." II. 356.

CRASSETUS. A lamp or cresset. See Milton, P. L., ii. 728.

"From the arched roof,

With naphtha and asphaltus,

WIVENEWEDDINGE. III. 70, 71, 72.
I cannot find any elucidation of this word, but I am satisfied that it must have something to do with the ancient belief and customs connected with Midsummer Eve. Stow, in his Survey of London, tells us "that on the "vigil of St. John the Baptist, every man's door being
"shadowed with green birch,
"long fennel, St. John's wort,
"orpin, white lilies, and such
"like, garnished upon with garlands of beautiful flowers, had "also lamps of glass, with oil
"burning in them all the night:
"some hung out branches of iron
"curiously wrought, containing
"hundreds of lamps lighted at

"once." He also mentions the bon-fires in the streets, every man bestowing wood or labour towards them. The wivenewed-dinge may be a service connected with these festivities, or it may refer more immediately to the old practice of maidens choosing their husbands on Midsummer Eve. The construction of the word causes me to incline to this latter view, though I am still at fault as to the exact signification of performing a wivenewedding. The hemp-seed tradition is thus described by Gay in his Fourth Pastoral:—

"At eve last midsummer no sleep I "sought,
 "But to the field a bag of hemp-seed
 "brought:
 "I scattered round the seed on every "side,
 "And three times, in a trembling accent,
 "cried;—

" "This hemp-seed with my virgin hand
 " "I sow,
 " "Who shall my true love be the crop
 " "shall mow.'
 "I straight looked back, and, if my
 "eyes speak truth,
 "With his keen scythe behind me came
 "the youth."

WODEHEN. "Et dabit unam galli-
 "nam quæ vocatur wodehen."
 III. 95, 96.

Y.

YOVE. "Et præterea faciet unam
 "aruram quæ vocatur yove, sci-
 "licet arabit dimidiam acram, et
 "recipiet de bursa domini unum
 "denarium obolum." III. 162.
 "Et debet arare quartam partem
 "unius acræ quæ vocatur yove,
 "et recipiet de bursa domini
 "obolum quadrantem." III. 163.
